LET'S HAVE NO ARRANGEMENTS! (NADA DE ARREGLOS.)

sidents.

I agree with you, friend John, let's have no arrangements. As we are not going to pay anything, anyhow, it is better not to arrange anything. You must know that I am a holder of Internal Debt, and therefore in a worse situation than you, but for all that I am not going to compound.

Friend Puleston, they are humbug-

Friend Puleston, they are humbugging us like so many boobies. When the schemes for reduction of interests and change of system of amortisation were initiated, there was a basis, rather optimistic perhaps, but certainly a basis, drawn up upon calculations sufficiently near the truth. But, from then to now, what a falling off is there! All has fallen to the ground, revenue, taxes, imposts, all have dwindled to the half, and a month may yet arrive when to the ground, revenue, taxes, imposts, all have dwindled to the half, and a month may yet arrive when the receipts will hardly suffice to pay the office-porters. Certainly, there are porters by the handred, but that is in order that we may be envious of no one in regard to staff.

I verily believe that this Republic, small as it is and with less than a million of inhabitants, has more official office-porters than all England and her colonies. With regard to porters and military men, no one can beat us. We have Chiefs, from Colonels downwards, sufficient to supply two or three large armies. Some day when least expected, you will find appearing in the papers advertisements from colonels, commandants, majors, captains, leutenants and ensigns offering their services for any kind of work. What a country for the military, friend John! It must be something to do with the climate. Just as certain regions spontaneously produce coffee, bananas, india rubber or cotton, so are men of arms spontaneously produce offee plannas, the local living that the honly thing that can happen is a fall.

Well then, Mister Puleston, we are not going to pay anything. Picture to yourself that when the interests of the debts were paid, we were three months in arrears in the local estimates, and now that none are paid we are just the same. The payment of those for October has just commenced, all the revenues of the country having been applied to to these payments, but now that we begin to pay interests, Lord only the first properties of the fall of the first properties of the fall of the fall of the first properties and pensions are sacred, not to be touched. In your speech, to the ground, revenue, taxes, imposts, all have dwindled to the half, and a month may yet arrive when the receipts will hardly suffice to pay the office-porters. Certainly, there are porters by the hundred, but that is in order that we may be envious of no one in regard to staff.

I verily believe that this Republic, small as it is and with less than a million of inhabitants, has more official office-porters than all England and her colonies. With regard to porters and military men, no one can beat us. We have Chiefs, from Colonels downwards, sufficient to supply two or three large armies. Some day when least expected, you will find appearing in the papers advertisements from colonels, commandants, majors, captains, lieutenants and ensigns offering their services for any kind of work. What a country for the military, friend John! It must be something to do with the climate. Just as certain regions spontaneously produce coffee, bananas, india rubber or cotton, so are men of arms spontaneously produced here. Some day or other I will change my condition as holder of Internal Debt for that of commandant. At least I will thus have some chance of a rise, whilst as holder of Debt the only thing that can happen is a fall.

Well then, Mister Puleston, we are in dire straits? How can she bring herself to make her children's clothes, to be deprived of the theatre, of jaunts, and the other diversions necessary to lighten the sad burden of widowhood? For this exists the State, which extends its generous hand and says to her, «Do not lament your misfortune, do not afflict yoursel, I will pension you whilst you live, your dresses and the lollipops for the little ones are assured.»

No, friend John, you English are very egoistical. You wish to receive what is due to you, and that is an absurd exaction. Here we look upon things differently and proceed with more philanthropy and justice. —
You laugh?——Oh yes, with justice. And to prove it to you I will cite a recent case.—There are I know not how many colonels, let us say fifty. Of these there were some privileged ones, who received full pay, the others remaining at half pay according to law.—This was a notorious injustice. But Government, which never tolerates injustices, suppressed it at once. By putting all the colonels on half pay? That is what you would think with your narrow-minded English judgment, but Government thought otherwise. No such chance! What was done was to put all the colonels on full

But, meanwhile, we are not paid for us the fact is of great importance.

Just 17 years ago to-day, because some four or five colonels were not content, they chucked out the Gofact, ask Dr. Ellauri, amongst you now, and he will tell you what the discontented colonels did to him, and what they might have done if he had not escaped over the roofs like a criminal.

And this when there were not the fourth part of the number of colonels there are to-day. Picture to yourself what might happen, then, if they became discontented to-day. No, my friend John, it does nt do to be too engagements and resources of the country so as to proceed upon a solid and serious base.

Neither you, the debtors abroad, nor we, the debtors at home, seek to be paid that which cannot be paid, but we do desire that we be not deceived. We all want the Government to speak to us frankly, not presenting calculations upon what it is hoped to have, but setting before us a statement of what really exists.

The country cannot go on with-out paying regularly its administra-tive estimates, and, with the present resources, this is not posible if it has to attend to the fulfilment of the proposed arrangements. This is a truth which even a blind man might see.

that the situation cannot be remedi-ed, tight as it is. And the remedy must be commenced by a change of persons. Do not think that I say this because I believe there this because I believe there is ineptitude, or bad faith, or want of honor in the men of Government, but because, as you well know, there is no touchstone for functionaries like adversity, and thus it is seen that the most upright and talented citizen may fall off and lose himself when he has to act in a time of deep depression.

What the President wants at his side in this difficult moment is, more than men of talent, men of character, men who in the cabinet councils have no more eloquence than councils have no more eloquence than enough to say no to every increase of a cent in the budget, men of an unconquerable incredulity to believe no more then they see and touch; in short, men for whom the telegraph is not interrupted at the most important moment of a negotiation. You will not understand this just now, Mister Puleston, but God understands and so do I, and others understands and so enough.

All this I say with grief, friend John, for I, not being English, am a man of feelings, and I cannot forget affections and even enthusiasms, but I have imposed upon myself an invariable rule to speak the truth, and to that I would secrifice Plate himself.

sacrifice Plato himself.

In evils of the body as in those of

of politics, improvements commence in the period of crisis. May be that if they are produced now, the con-valescence which we all desire will be initiated.

Meanwhile, Mister Puleston, you know the countersign; let's have no arrangements upon treacherous bases. Let us reduce what they ask us when they show us that they mean to pay in reality. Only thus will the country recover, little by little, its credit, and will gather forces to be able to comply, in no remote future, with its solemnly contracted engagements.

Let us ask them for the moment to lay aside falsehood, as a two-edged weapon in this situation, ticklish enough in all conscience; and let us hope that they will speak to us in the name of Government with all frankness, even if without rhetorical flourishes. A little of two and two make four is far more wanted than any oratorical tirade. any oratorical tirade.
I remain
Yours truly
Peter Truth.

Judging from the very reserved tone of our from the very reserved tone of our usually optimistic contemporary, the expected telegram is not of a very hopeful character.

«Why, miss,» he said, «I thought syou knew. Mr. Beresford he says o me: «Mr. Barton has a strong prejudice against warships, and I big praindice. prejudice against warships, and I want to overcome his prejudice, because the young lady, his niece is very curious to see over one. Now, if you could take them out in your boat, and get your gear out of order, or meet with some slight accident which would oblige you to come aboard the ship for assistance, I'd give you a sovereigu.' But you'll bear me out, miss, that twas you yourself ran us into the steamlaunch.

yourself ran us into the steamlaunch.

"Mr Beresford is a very foolish young man," said Edith, with a dignified air and a flushed face. «I hope you will never undertake such a foolish commission again," and
with this she walked away.

Mr. Barton returned from his visit with a highly self-satisfied air.

"I have called upon our young naval friend," he said to Edith. «I thanked him with scrupulous politeness for all his services, including that of saving your life, and then I told him candidly that great as his services had been, I did not consider myself justified on that account in admitting him to my circle of acquaintances. «You must not think," I said, «that it is from any personal dislike to yourself, but as a personal dislike to yourself, but as a member of the Peace Society I cannot receive fighting-men of any kind in my bouse."

But before his sentence was con-cluded Edith had rushed out of the Two days later she said to Mr.

Barton:

«Aunt Annie is asking me when I am going back to London. I think,
uncle, it is time for me to go.»

«Please yourself, my dear. I have greatly enjoyed having you; I should greatly enjoy your coming again.
But now, pethaps, it is as well you
should go.»

should go.»

So Edith went. The day before her departure she met Ralph Beresford at the gate. He was walking past with another man, but in spite of this she stopped and held out has hand

*I am glad to have met you,* she said quietly. *I wanted to say good-bye. I am going away to-morrow.* «Going away?» he echoed

«Yes,» she answered, smiling.
«What train are you going by?»

«What train are you going by?»
he asked eagerly.
She told him, and then further conversation was interrupted by the appearance on the scene of Mr.
Barton. The young man took off his hat and followed his friend.
«I stopped Mr. Beresford,» Edith explained, with a touch of defiance.
But her uncle had the discretion
to make no reply.

But her uncle had the discretion to make no reply.

Mr. Beresford was not at the station the following day to see Edith off, which was perhaps as well, for Mr. Barton had accompanied his niece thus far on her journey, and the encounter might have made things uncomfortable.

That afternoon, as Mr. Barton sat in his study, the door opened, and the maid announced:

"A gentleman."

«A gentleman.»
And close upon the heels of this announcement followed the gentleman—Mr. Ralph Beresford.
«Sir!» exclaimed the indignant

member of the Peace Society.

«I have come to ask for your niece's address,» said the undaunted

sailor. «An accident on board this morning detained me, or 1 should have been at the station to ask for it from herself.»

«That is unfortunate,» returned Mr. Barton dryly, «for I cannot, or, to be more accurate, will not give it to you.»

«You have no right to withhold it,» exclaimed the young man. «I love your niece. I want to marry her love your niece. I want to marry her if she will have me. You are not her guardian, and if you were I can satisfy you as to my ability to maintain a wife in comfort, and as to my general respectability.»

«My good young man, all these things are beside the question. I am not going to lend my assistance to marrying my niece to a professional murderer. That you will eventually contrive to marry her with my assistance I do not doubt; but I will have no hand in it. Her poor foolish have no hand in it. Her poor foolish mother married a soldier, and what was the result? She went to India, was the result? She went to innia, and died of its pestilential climate, an mot going to take my wife to India, replied Ralph; and certainly, Mr. Barton, I shall contrive to marry your niece in spite of you.

Good-morning.a When he was gone Mr. Barton sat down and wrote the following letter:

«Yx Dear Nicce,

«Our friend the Lieutenant
has just been here demanding your address, on the grounds of wishing to propose to you. I hope your own good sense, and the warning conveyed by your mother's fate, will prevent your ever entertaining such a proposal seriously. But young women are proverbially youlatile, and as I do not wish to have it on my conscience that I had aided your address, on the grounds of wishing to propose to you. I hope your own good sense, and the warning conveyed by your mother's fate, will prevent your ever entertaining such a proposal seriously. But young women are proverbially volatile, and as I do not wish to have it on my conscience that I had aided

He carefully posted this epistle himself and received by return of post the following reply:

«My Dear Uncle, and a strue regard for my walfare in refusing to give Mr. Beresford my address, but, as I am not a member of the Peace Society, I have no scruples in continuing his acquaintance. I have, therefore, written to tell him I am sorry your principles obliged you to treat him so ungratefully, and to say that if he cares to come and see us next time he is in London, Aunt Annie will be delighted to receive him.

«Your affectionate niece.

«Entre Lloyp.»

«And I have been the instrument of her destruction after all,» muttered the self great and great and see the substruction after all, wuttered the self great and see the self-red the self-red to receive him.

«And I have been the instrument of her destruction after all,» muttered the old gentleman, with genuine self-reproach. «But how could I anticipate her being so forward? Though, indeed, anything must be possible to a woman who will deliberately marry a professional murderer.»
