PARASITISM

Writing on the 1st of March last, being the second anniversary of Dr. Herrera's accession to the Presidency, we congratulated him on signs of a reformation in his governmental policy, and we expressed the opinion that the long wished-for change in the situation showed itself to be at last really at hand. This we sincerely thought at the time, and we made an effort to conquer the pessimism which recent circumstances and experiences had forced upon us. Once more we have been deceived. Within the last few weeks the situation has rapidly deteriorated, until at the present moment it is as much depressed and the outlook even more uncertain than ever.

Knowing how bad the situation and how doubtful the outlook have been at various periods during the crisis, now two years old, this is a serious thing to say, but we say it with the full responsibility of its meaning. There is only the hope that it may be the deepening of the clouds before clearing—the darkest hour before dawn—but that hope, we are afraid, is rather a remote one. We will not, for the moment, harrow the souls of our readers with the lightest word of the circumstances which combine to force this pessimistic conclusion upon us—perhaps they are already too painfully evident. We would like, however, to say a word or two as to some of the causes which, in our humble opinion, have led to the reagravation of the crisis.

Hitherto, we have generally blamed the Government, with more or less severity, for an unnecessary prolongation of the crisis, due to the want of confidence engendered by its proper acts and its obstinacy in not withdrawing its evil influence and interference in banking matters. Our opinion in this respect strengthens daily, but whilst we cannot blame Government any the less, we now feel inclined to blame the market the more, that is to say, a conviction is growing upon us that not the Government alone, but the market as well, has its share of responsibility in this prolongation of a painful situation.

This statement requires a little explanation. That the market should entirely distrust the Government in banking and financial matters, is only natural and logical. Until the Government reforms its ways, we would be sorry to advise otherwise. But, since the market entertains this distrust, it is neither natural nor logical that it should show such entire dependence upon Government measures and action for the cure of the crisis. Yet this is what it is doing. It knows the need to be hopelessly broken, yet leans upon it for support. It knows that the Government banking policy, past and present, has been mischievous, erroneous and entirely futile, yet it expects that policy to come to the rescue, and, instead of meeting it by vigorous counteraction, remains content with sullen acquiescence or stolid obstruction. Such an attitude could only have one result—a dead-lock—and that is what we are just coming to.

The market seems to us to have contracted what physiologists call a "parasitic habit"—that is to say, it has lost its independence. Its vitality is rendered dependent on that of some other body. At the present moment the market—and by this term we mean commerce and industry as well as finance—are hanging upon the establishment of the new bank. It makes no pretence of believing in it, in fact rather combats it than otherwise, but it is hanging on it nevertheless, and is attaching to it an importance which, as already said, we consider entirely exaggerated.

But this parasitic attitude has been the same, more or less, throughout the crisis. The market has perpetually been waiting for the passing of one measure or another, for the realisation of some loan or scheme, for some promised reorganisation or new bank or kindred contingency. This might have been excusable at first, but it was no longer excusable when Government so plainly showed its error, weakness and untrustworthiness. When Government made its first failure in the reorganisation of the National Bank and attempt to obtain new capital, the market should have based no further hopes on Government action, but should have, so to speak, cut the Government adrift, and done its best to conquer the crisis on its own resources. This it has not done in any way. It has waited and waited, and little else.

This is not as it should be. The market has no reason to be thus dependent on or at the mercy of Government action. Government has done its share, slowly enough, by getting its own finances into a certain amount of temporary order. Let the market be content with that, for we think it is hopeless to expect more at present. As to the new bank, we do not think its advent is going to rescue us, nor its non-advent to ruin us. If the market choose to throw off its parasitic attitude, it has resources and strength of its own to fight the rest of the crisis. It has strength enough to resist "curso forzoso," as has been shown more than once, then why not similar strength and unity for other purposes? Since it sees that Government measures are futile, let it organise to fight and defeat them—an organisation offensive as well as defensive—let it produce other and better measures, let it show Government that it must not and shall not interfere, that there are interests it is unfit and unworthy to meddle with, interests which are not to be killed for twenty bad Governments. We have had bloody political revolutions for far meaner causes. Now that the welfare and prosperity of the Republic are at stake, foreign interests and native as well, let us have a bloodless moral revolution; let the market declare its independence.

Parasitism, physiologists will tell us, is a vicious and unhealthy habit, which, like all bad habits, becomes confirmed with use. The market has here, then, a real danger ahead. We can see that it is suffering from it in the present, and if there is not a reaction, it will suffer more in the future for it will voluntarily deliver itself up, bound hand and foot, to the mercies of a Government which it knows is not to be trusted. The rescue from this lies in prompt and energetic action on its own resources. It is no use trusting Government to "cure" the crisis. Neither is the crisis to be cured by the supineness of local capitalists, the locking-up of capital, the withdrawal of business and a chronic attitude of waiting. One might as well wait for the skies to drop. That way madness lies. That road will only lead to permanent and utter demoralisation. No. To cure the crisis the market must rouse itself from its apathy and supineness, must exercise its own strength and resources, must declare its independence and cut itself adrift from the Government and all its works.

NEWS OF THE DAY

MONTEVIDEO

SUNDAY, JUNE 12, 1892. Trinity Sunday, Saints John of Sabagun and Odolph. Wm. Callen Bryant, American, post, died, 1873; Dr. Arce died 1842, 164 days past, 202 to the end of the year.

Parliament. In the Chamber of Senators, on Friday, some routine business was attended to and the report of the Committee of Legislation on the recent conflict of authority between the Executive and Judicial Powers was distributed. The Minister of Foment being again present, the discussion in detail was resumed of the Bill creating a National Department of Engineers, Articles 4 to 8 inclusive were approved without remark. Considerable discussion arose over the succeeding articles, and those up to Article 20 inclusive had been sanctioned, with various modifications, when the hour sounded and the sitting closed.

British Bank of South America. The somewhat complicated circumstances under which the English Bank of Rio de Janeiro sold its business to the Banco de Crédito Universal, and subsequently, as the British Bank of South America, re-purchased from the Companhia Geral de Estradas de Ferro no Brazil—which had absorbed the Banco de Crédito Universal—the right to carry on banking business in Brazil, have not affected its dividend-paying powers. Prior to 1889 the dividend had been steadily rising, and in that year reached 8 per cent. In 1890 it was 8 per cent, and now the directors have decided to recommend a distribution at the same rates, in addition to the bonus of 25 per cent paid in August last out of the proceeds of the sale. The British Bank of South America, for merely known as the English Bank of Rio, would therefore appear to be an exception to the general rule that you cannot eat your cake and have it. The cake was eaten in the shape of the 25 per cent, and the shareholders still have it in their 10 per cent dividend.—Financial Times.

The "United Charities." During the week ending 10th instant, 9 cases were relieved and 2 resident families supplied with meals. 17 sailors ex "s.s. "Dolores" were shipped from the Home, and the crew of the shipwrecked British Ship "Oceana" have been received there. 25 Naval and 64 merchant seamen received 66 beds and 179 meals. At the Committee meeting the Secretary reported having paid the grants for May, and also reported receipt of letter from American Seaman's Friendly Society to which he had already replied. The resignation of Mr. G. Lloyd Davies as Secretary was accepted and Mr. A. F. Guillemand was appointed in his stead. Mr. Davies, however, remains on the Committee.

Financial. The banking negotiations remain undecided. According to current rumours—to which, however, we attach little importance—the effort to secure the cooperation of local capital is not likely to succeed, as neither Government nor the capitalists will yield on disputed points. Rumours are again circulated that Dr. Ramirez will resign the Ministry of Finance. There was a secret, informal meeting of Deputies yesterday, when the banking matter was discussed, and we hear that the Minister will probably be interpellated on that and other subjects, including also the non-presentation of a budget. It is further said that the Minister of Government has withdrawn his interposition, and that Mr. Notzlin has asked for a further period, in order to receive fresh telegrams from London.

SUNDRIES

The Bill for the creation of a National Department of Engineers still occupies the Chamber of Senators, who are bestowing on it all the attention so important a subject requires. There can be no crisis. It is all a dream, a nightmare. The country is overflowing with wealth and prosperity. Why, here is the Petition Committee of the Representatives actually advising the granting of a pension of $60 ($12) a month, for eighteen months, to one Alejandro Casciani, in order to complete his studies of fencing in Europe. In return for this, when he comes back to the country, he will be expected to give the services of his "art," gratuitously and for an equal period, where Superiority may appoint. After this, it is absurd to think of any crisis.

A "family" concert, vocal and instrumental, will be held in the "Lira" on Monday evening. We return thanks to the Committee for a courteous invitation to attend. A dead whale has been thrown ashore close to the port of Coronells, department of Rocha. The size of the animal is not mentioned.

The "S. A. Journal" of May 7 refers as follows to the article "Fraudulent Uruguay" which we are reproducing:—"The second number of the Investor's Review, edited by Mr. A. J. Wilson, Financial Editor of the Standard, has now appeared. The article on 'Fraudulent Uruguay,' which is written in the editor's most pungent style, will probably be perused with much interest by many of our readers, though it will scarcely add to the peace of mind of investors who hold the bonds of that Republic. The transactions of Messrs. Baring Brothers with this State are unsparingly criticised and severely condemned. The writer gives it as his opinion that the country will be found to be totally unable to carry out the service of its debt, even upon the reduced scale recently accepted by its creditors."

The unfavourable report of the Military Committee of the Representatives on Deputy Menozza's ill-timed bill for the unlimited extension of political rights to the military has already been distributed three times, but has not yet been brought up for discussion, which is not surprising remembering the scandalous way in which this Chamber neglects the business before it.

The football fixtures for to-day are the first Rugby match of the season on the Cricket Field, at 2.30 p.m., and a pick-up match on the Albion ground at the same hour. We believe there will also be the usual game of Polo.

The judicial notices of impending marriages published in yesterday's Siglo were noteworthy. One was of a swain of 19 with a damsel of 16, two of the other brides were 15 and the last only 13. This is coming very close to the legal limit of age. The other grooms were 21, 30 and 25 respectively.

Put the little ones to bed happy. Never whip children just before they retire to rest. Let the father's caress, the mother's kiss be the last link between the day's path of pain or pleasure and the night's sleep—Send them to bed happy. If there is sorrow, punishment, or disgrace, let them meet it in the daytime, and have hours of play in which to recover happiness, which is childhood's right. Let the weary feet and the busy brain rest in bed happy.

Gen. Perez, Minister of War, and Dr. Miguel Herrera y Obes, President of the Representatives, two sufferers from influenza, are both recovering.

We regret to hear that Dr. Lawrie is getting worse, and his state yesterday was considered critical.

At the Politeama this evening will be given two acts of "Doña Juanita," followed by "Cavalleria Rusticana," an irresistible programme. At the Cibils there will be afternoon and evening performances, but we have not learnt the particulars.

The Argentine politicians, Dr. Alem and his companions, have been much visited in the Hotel Paris, where they are staying. They hope that the state of siege will be raised next week when they will return.

It is telegraphed from Rivera that a resident has been murdered and the second commissary of the district wounded by a group of bandits, who are committing many depredations in the neighbourhood.

According to a not very explicit telegram from Minneapolis the vote of the Electoral Convention gave the following results, Gen. Harrison 535 votes, Mackinlay 182, Blaine 182, Reed 4, Lincoln 1. We believe this, however, is merely for the selection of candidates.

The final election of the Argentine President takes place in Buenos Aires to-day, and there is no longer any doubt that Dr. Roque Saenz Peña will obtain a large majority of votes. Perhaps this will clear the troubled political atmosphere a little. There will be a race meeting of secondary interest at Maroñas to-day. The favorites are For Ever, Combate, Express, Violetta and Twin. There has been but little betting.

Col. Lorenzo Latorre, exile and ex-dictator, is reported as seriously ill from influenza and pneumonia, in Buenos Aires.

The Chief of Police of Minas telegraphs news of the capture of the assassin who murdered the former Eduardo Figueredo on the 4th instant, inflicting 17 stabs, 9 of them mortal. The murderer, who was his nephew Emiliano, is a young man 25 years of age.

FRAUDULENT URUGUAY.

As is now well known, Messrs. Baring Brothers & Co. did not live as a firm to sell this last loan for 2,000,000 to the public. They collapsed before they had the chance. This loan therefore appeared among the assets which the guarantors of the firm took over at the instance of the Bank of England. And that was not all for which Messrs. Baring Brothers were liable to Uruguay at that date. They and their partners, Messrs. Hale & Co., had also contracted to find the money for building a railway from Montevideo, to be called the Western Railway of Uruguay. Upon this contract they committed themselves to the extent of about 1,250,000, and according to the statement made by Sir Edward Thornton at the meeting of the Uruguayan bondholders held in the end of August last year money had been spent under this contract to the extent of 400,000. Two things, therefore, had to be done by those who had the management of the Baring liquidation. It was necessary in some manner to sell the 2,000,000 loan of 1890, and it was equally necessary to shuffle out of the further obligations under his railway contract. It was quite clear, however, that the public would not take the 2,000,000 loan at any price. Mr. Liddell, the Governor of the Bank of England, in estimating the value of the Baring assets, put it at price of 50, but to put it at 50 was to say that it was altogether unissuable. Another plan, therefore, had to be hit upon if the estate was to realise this asset.

Now it so happened that there were financiers interested in Uruguay from different points of view to that of Messrs. Baring, and these financiers thought it to their interests to coalesce with that firm in endeavouring to make a new arrangement of the entire debt. These financiers had some interests, it is said, in the Western Railway project, but their immediate aim was the establishment of a National Bank of Uruguay, with rights of coinage and rights of issue. These financiers had some interests, it is said, in the Western Railway project, but their immediate aim was the establishment of a National Bank of Uruguay, with rights of coinage and rights of issue. These financiers had some interests, it is said, in the Western Railway project, but their immediate aim was the establishment of a National Bank of Uruguay, with rights of coinage and rights of issue. These financiers had some interests, it is said, in the Western Railway project, but their immediate aim was the establishment of a National Bank of Uruguay, with rights of coinage and rights of issue.

One little obstacle, however, still stood in the way of this arrangement, and that was the railway guarantee, for Uruguay had not been lavish merely in borrowing for "purposes of State." It had granted subsidies or guarantees of interest to half a dozen railway companies, and these companies had built lines and contracted obligations upon the faith of these guarantees to the extent of about 10,000,000, on some half of which it was still liable for 7 per cent interest. Sir Edward Thornton estimated that if all the debts of the Republic were included, plus these guarantees, which themselves required 340,000, Uruguay would have to find more than 1 1/2 million sterling per annum for more than half the average debt service. This was considerably acknowledged revenue of the previous five or six years. To make all complete—to make a water-tight agreement, so to say—it was necessary that these railways should be pacified, should consent to compound for and cut down their claims for 7 per cent upon their guaranteed capital, and come into the contemplated arrangement. This was done—or, at least, seemed to be done—and all the more easily because the companies were never likely again to get their full money, or any money at all, from Uruguay. On the last day of August, therefore, a meeting was held of Uruguayan bondholders under theegis of the Council of Foreign Bondholders, to receive an account of the arrangement whereby the interest on the entire debt was to be lowered to 3 1/2 per cent, and to be asked to assent to it. Only two days' notice was given to the bondholders of this meeting, and it is probable that a large proportion of those in attendance had no interest in the matter whatever, for the Council of Foreign Bondholders fulfils many functions and has always a considerable following of people who may be said to assume the part of any class of State creditors whose interests the Council may protect. They act the part of the hired mourners at an Eastern funeral, and will to order. But that as it may, the outline was carried at this meeting by 123 votes to 35, and those who attended it listened to a most exhaustive and interesting speech upon the finances of Uruguay delivered by Sir Edward Thornton. He dealt with the whole subject in what was really so masterly a style that one might have imagined his discourse to be on the resources and commitments of one of the great Provinces of India, or of the United States. He spoke in such obvious good faith, too, that had we not known by past experience all this talk of guarantees and about the "assignment of 45 per cent. of the Customs Revenue for the service of the debt," and the "necessity of not putting upon Uruguay a heavier load than the country could conveniently bear" to be simple comedy, Sir Edward's narrative would have been most impressive.

As it was, Mr. R. B. Martin, who presided, and Sir Edward, together produced at that meeting and on the instructed mind much the same effect as these two delightful actors, Mr. Brandon Thomas and Mr. Woodcock Grossmith, in "A Fantomine Rehearsal," that pleasant skit which has so long given many citizens a good laugh. We thought of the duet sung by "Captain Tom Robinson" and "Lord Arthur Pomeroy," the burlesque was just as exquisite, just as gravely done in the one case as in the other, and nearly as droll. It was all the more amusing in the case of Mr. Martin and Sir E. Thornton, because it was, we are sure, quite unconscious burlesque on their part. They are so accustomed, these gentlemen, to take life seriously, to deal with actualities of business that it never seemed to enter their minds that the whole of this Uruguayan finance business was no better than an impudent fraud. Hitherto, of course, Uruguay had not done well, had cheated its creditors, and laughed at 'guarantees' and 'special hypothecations' and 'assignment of revenues'.

Mr. Aquino, Q.C., M.P., addressed a large and enthusiastic meeting at the Hampstead Vestry Hall last night on the political situation. Criticising the policy of the Government during their six years of office, he doubted whether a parallel could be found of a representative assembly sitting at Westminster for a corresponding period with such a record of opportunities wasted, of good work undone, and of bad work successfully and resolutely achieved.

Mr. George Conquest, Mr. John Hare, and Mr. Edward Terry gave evidence yesterday before the Theatres and Music Halls Committee of the House of Commons. They agreed in objecting to the jurisdiction of the London County Council, and in preferring the maintenance of the Lord Chamberlain. Mr. Terry said that the sooner many country theatres are effectively inspected and improved, or the licences withdrawn, the better for public safety.

The Joint Committee of the Lords and Commons appointed to consider and report upon the several Bills for the construction of electric railways in London commenced taking evidence yesterday. Mr. Gabriel Goldney, City Remembrancer, and Mr. Greathead, joint engineer to the different companies, were the witnesses called.

We regret to announce that Lord Bramwell died at Edenbridge yesterday from the effects of a chill caught when travelling from London. He was eighty-four years of age.

Prince Henry of Battenberg presided last evening at the Hotel Métropole over the annual festival of the Provident Surgical Appliances Society, when more than 1,000 were subscribed in aid of the funds of the charity.

The thirtieth annual business meeting of the Congregational Union was held at the Memorial Hall last evening, when a report was presented recording the further growth of the denomination. Mr. Albert Spicer was elected chairman for next year, but he desired time to consider the matter. The important question of the secretaryship gave rise to an animated discussion in consequence of the attack upon the Rev. W. J. Woods, who had been nominated for the post. Mr. Woods repudiated the charge of plagiarism brought against him, and after speeches by the Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, the Rev. Dr. Parker, and others, Mr. Wood's appointment was unanimously and enthusiastically endorsed.

Scott's Snapper Rooms, a well-known restaurant, at the corner of Windmill-street, and facing the Haymarket, were soon after one o'clock yesterday morning burnt to the ground. Three youths, employed as under-waiters in the establishment and the cashier, also a lad, were killed in their bedrooms by the flames in spite of the most strenuous exertions on the part of the firemen and police to save them. The staff of the hotel, which adjoins the restaurant, managed to get into the street in safety. The supper rooms, the property of Messrs. Sinclair Brothers, were very old, and the fire, which, while it lasted, blazed with intense rapidity, is supposed to have originated in the overheating of a flue.

Miss Faulkner asserts that she has not admitted that her story as to her having been assaulted in a railway carriage near Leeds last week was a fabrication. Superintendent Parish, of the Great Northern Company's police, affirms that she has made various contradictory statements to him, and expresses the opinion that she alone is responsible for what befell her last week.

General Gresser the Prefect of St. Petersburg, according to a telegram from that city, has been poisoned. His condition affords but slight hope of recovery.

At Lord's yesterday the M.C.C. and Ground, commencing a match against Lancashire, ran up a score of 288, Chatterton contributing 109 not out. Before the call of time the County made 24 without losing a wicket. Some very promising cricket was shown in a match between colts of Notts and Yorkshire on the Nottingham Ground. In the match at Oxford between the University Eleven and Sixteen Freshmen, the latter made but a poor show. The Cambridge Freshmen's match, postponed from last week, was continued. Lord Sheffield's team arrived at Plymouth yesterday from Australia.

It was arranged in the Court of Appeal yesterday that the Parnell v. Wood will suit should be set down for Thursday next. A compromise arranged between the parties has already been sanctioned by Mr. Justice Jeune, but there being a question as to his jurisdiction, he is not acting as a Chancery judge, it is desired that the point should come before the Court of Appeal.

In the Queen's Bench Division an important point was determined in the case of the East London Waterworks Company v. Kellerman. The judge of the Bow County Court had ruled that the fact of the defendant being mortgagor in possession of certain premises did not make him owner within the meaning of the Act 50 and 51 Vic. c. 21. sec. 4, and liable for a water rate which had become due. The Court now reversed this.

Lack of funds is given by the Spanish Government, says a Madrid Correspondent, as the cause of the lowness of preparations for the celebration of the fourth centenary of the discovery of America by Columbus, which it was at first thought would be an imposing festivity in Spain next autumn. The private efforts of the learned societies, the academies, and geographical, literary, and scientific corporations and many Spanish statesmen and politicians, contrast with the lack of zeal displayed by the authorities. The Spanish-American Republics are taking up the idea of the Spanish celebration with more zest than seemed probable at first, and the Americanist Congress at La Rabida Monastery, near Huelva, will be attended by men of note from the Anglo-Saxon and Spanish-American Republics, and from most European countries. Savants and persons taking an interest in the Columbian age and early American annals have sent in numerous adhesions to this Congress.

The Romance of a Tea-Garden.

(A SHORT STORY.)

I am a bad hand at describing people; but my first impression of the new-comer was decidedly favourable, though there was nothing particularly striking about his rather grave, sunburnt face, and tall, well-knit figure; but the expression of his brown eyes was noticeable on account of its intense sadness, which rarely, if ever, entirely left them.

We had a good laugh over a friendly peg at the account he gave us of his adventures since landing in Dimpiore two days before. He seemed reticent about himself and his own affairs, and although I questioned him a little regarding his reasons for leaving the dear old country for one which had already well earned its title of 'the Englishman's grave,' he did not enlighten us much upon the subject, and I did not wish to appear inquisitive.

He soon got familiar with his work, and I quickly found in him an efficient assistant—one who thought nothing of hard work—and the pleasantest of chums; in fact, he was before long a general favourite, although the natives soon learnt that, in spite of kindly just treatment of themselves, he would stand no nonsense from anyone, and never overlooked a fault.

Hussein, the boy whose arm was injured the day of Wynne's arrival at the garden, attached himself to the latter in an extraordinary way, and, touched by his dog-like faithfulness, Wynne took him on as a servant when his arm was well enough, and he soon learnt bearer-work sufficiently well to take the place eventually when the other man died.

The hot weather was unusually trying that year, and I had one or two sharp cases of fever and ague—one especially severe one at the close of the season, which nearly finished me off—and in each case Wynne proved himself to be as good a siquer as he was most other things. Many a night did he spend by my bedside when each weary hour seemed longer than the last, and faller of torment. One moment I would be shivering violently with the sensation of iccol water trickling down my back, the next gasping for breath, even the very touch of the bedclothes burning me, and my head feeling like a swollen ball of fire; and there was Wynne always ready to talk or read, to fan me, or to give me my hourly dose of medicine or beef-tee.

The last attack I had was a clincher, and I don't think old Milman, the Station Doctor, ever expected to pull me through; in fact, he told me afterwards that he had given my dimensions as near as possible to the P.W. Department, that my coffin might be ready for me when required, and fit properly; because out there, where the dead have to be interred in a few hours, it is impossible sometimes, when a man dies in an out-garden, to get a coffin made in time, if he is to be buried in the station cemetery; so there are generally one or two kept ready made, and occasionally a fellow has to take his chance of a fit. Milman had heard me once say that I should strongly object to being doubled up to fit my coffin, or to rattle about with a few inches to spare; so out of consideration for my feelings, as he afterwards told me, he ordered one to be prepared in readiness for my demise, which, thanks to Wynne's skilful nursing, is still a thing of the future.

When I rose from my bed that time, I knew I owed my life to the quiet, grave-faced man, who received all my attempts to thank him for all he had done for me with a brief, almost rough, 'Don't be an ass, Cunningham; I have only done what any other man in my place would have done; I had my heart at all.' But he wrung my hand hard, and as he turned away I heard him mutter: 'It has helped to keep me from madness.' There seemed no further need of words between us; each knew that the other was his friend for life, though neither guessed how short a time remained to prove it.

I had often wondered to myself what could have induced Wynne to leave England and friends, and take up with tea-planting in such a country as Assam; but he was singularly uncommunicative regarding himself, and I somehow shrank from questioning him. We were both lying in our long bamboo chairs on the verandah one evening, according to our usual custom of smoking a pipe after dinner; it was English mid-day, I remember, and it had brought a home letter for Wynne, which he had perused with a curious tightening of his lips, and a return of the old look of pain to his face, which had not been so evident lately; and all that day he had seemed unusually restless, this being almost the first time he had settled down for a smoke. It was a glorious night; the sky-line between the eaves of the verandah and the tree-tops was simply studded with stars; the warm, fragrant air was bright with myriads of darting fireflies; while the drowsy chirp of grasshoppers, mingled with the hum of insects, and the monotonous creak of the punkah rope alone broke the stillness.

We had been talking of England, as I intended applying for leave in the following spring, and taking a run home to see my poor old mother, probably for the last time in this world; and then we had relapsed into silence.

Wynne was in the shadow cast by a tall mango-tree, and I could only see his outline as he lay full-length in the long chair, a broad-shouldered, well-proportioned figure—a man any woman might be proud to call son or husband. I had gathered from the little he had said that his mother was living, but no more; and now, with a sudden impulse, I spoke out the thought that was in my mind.

'Wynne, whatever induced you to give up your chance of a better thing in England to come out to this confounded vapour-bath of a country? I could hear the bamboo chair creak under the sudden start he gave, and for a moment he did not answer me; then he said with a queer sort of shake in his voice:

'Fate, Cunningham, fate! I dare say you have often thought me mighty close about my own affairs; but if you care to hear it I will tell you why I threw up everything, and nearly broke my mother's heart by leaving her to come to India.' (To be continued.)

SCRAPS

'Ma,' said Jennie Parvau, 'they say those Smiths are awful stylish and have got a pedigree.' 'Got the pedigree, have they?' said Mrs. Parvau, excitedly. 'Well, you keep away from them, for I don't want you to catch it.'
