GALLIA, by Marie Muriel Dowse, author of the famous book "A Girl of the Karpathians," a story told by a young girl who saw something of Parisian life, of the sunny side of it to a considerable extent, and who tells her story in a peculiarly charming manner. Men and women of the world will acknowledge this to be a story worth the time to read, whilst the old maid will hold up her hands in holy horror and cry "Shocking!" Eighty cents is the "Open Sesame" of this delightful story. Send to or call at Jacobson's, Ituzaingo 141.

OUR CHRISTMAS EXHIBITION this year is certainly the best on record. We have works of Art which we sell under the humble name of Christmas Cards. We have made it our business to forward to the leading Art Institution of England some views of the River Plate, and these have been reproduced by Goussier Photographers in a manner which has as yet never been equalled. We sell them at the low price of 0.25 cents each, and nothing could be more appropriate for a present to kind friends at home. Call at Jacobson's, Ituzaingo 141.

SHORTHAND WRITERS call at Jacobson's, Ituzaingo 141, and inspect all the latest novelties from Pitman's in London - such as the last - the Vol. VII - of his "Shorthand Weekly," a handsome, large and cheap complete bound book, all the numbers out of the "phonographic Miscellany," the newest and the best monthly for shorthand writers. Every new, cheap and instructive book issued at home is brought out and sold at London price at Jacobson's, Ituzaingo 141.

POLITICAL NOTES.
The Decree has been issued accepting the resignation of Dr. Campisteguy as minister of Finance, and temporarily entrusting the duties of the Ministry to the 1st Official Sr. Eugenio Madalena, who is no stranger to the post.

The above Decree is regarded as an indication that Sr. Cuestas is unable or unwilling to fill the portfolio for the present. This is not surprising. We can quite understand that it would be very difficult to persuade any competent man to accept the post, in the present complicated and uncertain political and financial situation, and with less than three months term of office before him, a period too short to develop any plan, or in fact, to do anything more than carry on things mechanically as they are found, a task to which Sr. Madalena has proved himself equal before now.

Still, although this must be taken into account, the lapsus in the portfolio weakens the Cabinet and therefore the position of Sr. Cuestas' Government, and thus the failure to fill it is a matter of regret, still more when it is attributed, as has been the case, to the refusal of Sr. Cuestas to embark on a more vigorous policy against the Chambers and the "collectivity." Amongst those to whom it is said the portfolio has been offered, are Dr. C. Martin Ramirez Sr. Carlos Lenzi, Dr. Eduardo Acavedo (present editor of the Siglo) Sr. J. C. Marquez and Sr. José Saavedra - though there is some uncertainty about the last two. At all events Sr. Cuestas may be credited with going to some of the best men, and it is better to see the portfolio vacant than to see it given to an incompetent man or to one whose name would produce a bad effect on public opinion.

Although startling political events have been prophesied for this week, so far from there being any sign of them yet, everything is remarkably dull and there is scarcely an item of news, nor even anything particularly new in the way of rumor. As regards the foremost questions in the public mind, the conflict with the permanent Commission, the dis-solution of the Chambers, and the presidential problem, there is practically nothing new to add. The present tactics of the parliamentary supporters of Sr. Cuestas seem confined to procuring fresh adhesions from the "Colorado" Clubs in the interior, and in this they seem to be very successful. It is said that they propose shortly to hold a "Colorado" congress in the capital, with delegates from all parts of the interior, at which Sr. Cuestas will be proclaimed as the candidate of the party. It remains to be seen what effect this will have on the Chambers which have so often asserted that they represent that party. About Sr. Gromosoro and his supporters we hear little or nothing worth repeating - they are playing a waiting game. The Siglo, not without considerable reason, calls attention to the narrow and imperfect view which nearly all the Buenos Aires papers, even the best of them, such as the Nacion, have recently taken of the situation here. It points out that it is not as they seem to suppose, a conflict between personalities, nor between parties; it is a struggle in which all the parties combine their forces against a handful of men who pretend to impose their bastard ambitions on the entire country. Neither can mention be made of concessions to this oligarchy, for there is an absolute incompatibility of interests between the Republic and them. The question is one of life or death for this country. Above all and beyond all, we are trying to avoid civil war, which will fall on us again with all its calamities, if a shadow of the "collectivity" remains in the government next March. For Sr. Cuestas to abandon the struggle in such a situation, as it would seem the Nacion has suggested, would be equivalent, says the Siglo, to a soldier deserting his post in face of the enemy. "Sr. Cuestas is to day the banner of resistance given by circumstances to the country in the struggle against the fatal circle which represents opposition to sound policy and administrative morality, oligarchical tendencies, electoral fraud, favoritism and squandering of the revenues."

The idea on which we have so often insisted, even at the risk of being thought extreme, that there can be no transaction or compromise, but only war d'outrance, between the country and the "collectivity" is now making itself plain to our naive contemporaries. It finds expression in yesterday's Trubana from which we quote the following sentence: "There are cases, and the present is one of them, in which radicalism carried to its utmost limits becomes a duty imposed equally by political morality and by national dignity. Dr. Herrera and his faction have inflicted on the people the greatest offences possible. With insolent disdain, humiliating scepticism and ironical irresponsibility, they have revelled in wounding, a hundred times, the noblest and most just desires of the people, in destroying the most respectworthy popular ideals, continually boasting of their profound contempt for public opinion and all its protests. It is necessary therefore that social anathema should fall on these men and their cabal, annulling their latest efforts at preponderance by the vacuum created by the reprobation of all who are striving to dignity in the prolonged political orgy now approaching its end. The 'collectivity' may be triumphing materially in the matter of behind-the-scenes arrangements, but it must not be allowed to triumph morally over the people by a feeble submission before the fatality of events. It is necessary that, even with its votes and its majority of clique, it must still be made to feel the vacuum and hostility around it, and to know that it has failed to impose itself again upon the country. This is not a struggle of parties against parties, but a struggle of all the parties against the 'herrero' oligarchy - it is not a struggle, but a war without quarter that has commenced." As regards a candidate of transaction, the Trubana says frankly that the best candidate ceases to be acceptable when supported by the "collectivity." Our readers will not fail to notice the coincidence of its ideas with those expressed in some of our recent articles.

The investigation into the affairs of the Jafatura (Police Office of the Capital) is nearly complete. A deficit of $14,000 has been found, but it corresponds to the administration of Col. Abella, not that of Sr. Sanchez, probably being the remainder of the large deficit the former left behind him on quitting office. It also transpires that during the Sanchez administration, with the authority of Sr. Borda and under pretext of the revolution of eventuales or sundries were raised from $20,000 to $120,000. The Investigating Commission point out that an economy of some $40,000 the year could be made in the police budget, without prejudice to the service.

Of the other administrative investigations on foot, we have heard nothing at all for some time past.

Danby, Armadale and Co., London.
For some time things concerning Danby and his accomplice Armadale in their swindle on the British Bank of South America in Buenos Aires have been very quiet and therefore the following items afforded by the London Press concerning the arrest of Armadale in London on Thursday November the 12th are of interest.

"Charles Armadale alias Findlay, alias Prescott," described as an auctioneer, of Melbourne, was charged at Bow-street, on Thursday, on a provisional extradition warrant, with forgery, fraud and larceny in the Argentine Republic. Detective Inspector Sexton, of Scotland yard, said that on Tuesday he found prisoner detained at the town hall, Southport and asked him his name. He replied, "Charles Findlay." "That is not your name," said the witness. "I recognise you as a person giving the name of Prescott, who, on July 31, went through the form of marriage with a widow at Brixton, and this is your photograph." He made no reply. The witness continued, "And when you left the widow you left behind a pocket book bearing the name of C. E. Armadale." Again the prisoner said nothing, so the witness said, "Where is your shirt?" A shirt was handed in by a police-officer, and the witness showed the prisoner that it bore the name of Frederick Danby. The prisoner admitted that it was his, and then the witness said, "I am satisfied now that you are Charles Armadale." The prisoner replied, "Your hand is too strong for me; you have all the trumps; I can't play the game against you."

The witness read the warrant to him, and in response the prisoner said, "That is all right as a matter of form; but I retain for the present what I have to say about the forgery. How much did they say it was?" "Six thousand pounds," said the witness. On the way to London prisoner remarked "It is useless trying to spoof you; I will tell you the truth. My correct name is Charles Armadale Prescott, but I used the name of Armadale when travelling in South America. Did I understand from you that the cheques were jointly signed by Danby and by myself?" "I do not know," I have not seen the cheques," said the witness. "Then it is no use my fighting the matter in England. The important witnesses are those who saw me at the bank, and they are at Buenos Aires, so the sooner I get back the better." Prisoner was remanded. This is the first extradition that has been applied for by the Argentine Government since the conclusion of the recent treaty. The prisoner was arrested originally at Southport on a charge of stealing some dress lengths. He then said that he was an Australian auctioneer, who came to England for the Jubilee with £500, every penny of which was gone, and he asked that he might if possible, be sent back to Australia. He was eventually acquitted on the charge of theft.

Nature's Cure for Over-population
The plague in India continues to spread, and undoubtedly will give much trouble before it is got under. The disease has so marked a tendency to become endemic where the conditions of the soil are favourable to it, and the number of towns and villages in India which contain just that element of filth which is required for its local development is so great, that we can hardly venture to hope that it will quickly die out. We have in fact, both in regard to plague and famine to face what is really a new difficulty in the history of such scourges. Our common humanity has led us to interfere with Nature's cure for the conditions by which they are produced - a savage and inhuman cure; but one that has again and again proved effectual. Over-population and a low standard of living, a willingness to live and to marry on what will just keep body and soul together, are at the bottom of both plague and famine. A condition in which the sum total of a man's labour is required to provide food and raiment leaves him no opportunity of putting by for a time of want, or of giving reasonable care to his sanitary surroundings. Nature's cure for over-population is pestilence and famine, and as far back as history reaches we find that by these means the balance between food and population has again and again been rectified, and accumulated wealth has been divided among a lessened population. We have chosen to interfere with Nature; the humane instincts which our religion has implanted in us have driven us to relieve famine, and, if possible, to hold pestilence in check, and yet, meanwhile under the plea of not interfering with native religion and native customs, we have permitted the continuance of a condition of affairs which never could and never can go on without a periodical decimation. The problem before the ruling power is difficult, and in a sense dangerous for its solution involves interfering with many of the prejudices and religious customs of the natives. But like other peoples, the natives cannot both eat their cake and have it. If they are to enjoy the protection against Eastern plagues which Western civilisation tries to give them, they must in return be made to conform to Western standards of decent living. There must, then, be no hesitation in enforcing sanitary measures in India - unless, indeed, hardening our hearts and buttoning up our pockets, we let Nature take her course and exact her tribute in pestilence and famine. - Hospital.

SUNDRIES
The great event of to-day will be the Athletic Sports at the Blanquada field, an annual gathering that generally brings the entire community together. The storm of Monday night has somewhat cleared the oppressive atmosphere and also improved the condition of the course, which was previously very dry and hard. We think we may venture to predict favorable weather, and this with a good attendance of spectators, will hold to make a successful meeting. The prizes were on view yesterday in Galli's window, making a goodly show and attracting much attention.

—We note that the majority of prizegivers incline towards articles that are of use as well as of ornament. This is a movement in the right direction. Of all the prizes that can be offered a young man, the old-fashioned cup is the least useful, and at times it can hardly be said that it is even ornamental. We are heretics enough to believe that utility should not be overlooked in the giving of prizes, whether for athletics or anything else. If a young man's talent happens to lie in his legs more than his head there is no reason that he should not get some profit out of it, as well as glory.

—At 9 p.m. Monday there was a very violent storm of wind, dust, rain, thunder and lightning, which was renewed at intervals, though not so violently, throughout the night and until after daybreak yesterday. The heat preceding the storm was suffocating. The storm gave a lengthy warning of its approach, so that the vessels in the bay were well prepared and there are no casualties to report. Still it broke very suddenly on land, causing a sauve qui peut among the people in the streets, and smashing many a glass door or window. The rain, which is reported as having been fairly general over the Republic, was very welcome, as the land was beginning to suffer from drought.

—Storms seem to be common all over the world just now. Yesterday's telegrams chronicle a severe storm in the Mediterranean, causing great damage, especially on the Italian coast. At Naples alone thirteen vessels are wrecked. In the north of Spain there have been exceptionally severe snow storms, interrupting all traffic by road and rail. Several persons have been found frozen to death in snow drifts.

—There ought to be a convention between the Governments in Buenos Aires and in Montevideo that a political exile from the one capital shall not be allowed to take refuge in the other. The capitals are far too near each other and too closely connected for banishment to be effectual, and a determined political agitator finds the River Plate but small impediment to his plans. For instance, Dr. Julio Herrera in Buenos Aires can keep nearly as close a hold upon his followers and can succeed in occupying the attention of the press and public nearly as much as if he were still in Montevideo. He is still too close to be comfortable or to be healthy for the public welfare. He ought at least, to have been sent across the Andes, or across the Atlantic. Banishment from Montevideo to Buenos Aires, in fact, is little more effective than it would be from London to Green-wich, or from Liverpool to New-Brighton, or from Glasgow to Dunoon. This is shown by the way in which his lieutenants and wire-pullers run across to see him and receive instructions and directions, and are back in thirty six hours. His voice can still be heard in Montevideo - literally, not metaphorically, for it can be heard by telephone.

—An incident is related in the life of the late Bishop of Bangor, Dr. Campbell, to the effect that a poor parishioner having complained to him that he could not go to church for lack of a pair of trousers, the good clergyman sent him a pair of his own, but was a little nonplussed on Sunday morning to find that it was his best. A similar story is related of Archdeacon Davies, of Brecon, who, finding a man in bed one day while his wife was busily washing, rated him for his laziness, but discovered that the poor fellow had but one shirt and this had to be washed and dried before he could get up. Hearing this, the archdeacon marched home, made up a parcel of shirts, and took them back to the woman as a present. Unfortunately it was found on Sunday morning that the archdeacon had given away every one he had.

—Peri at the gate of Paradise - coaxingly. "Do, Mr. Peter, let me bring in my wheel." Peter sternly. "No, miss, you can't. If you want to scorch you must go below."

—The U. S. Congress was opened Monday, in his Message President McKinley gave preference to the monetary question which, he said, was one of life or death for the United States. He urged the Congress to lose no time in studying the matter so as to give it a definite solution. The State had sufficient gold and silver to convert at sight and at once all the notes in circulation. He promised shortly to present a Bill modifying the organization of the National Banks. The Customs revenue was steadily increasing, showing the excellence of the present Customs system. He then made lengthy references to the Cuban question, saying that the United States never intended to take advantage of the great misfortunes of Spain. He eulogised the valor and patriotism of the Spanish people. The United States only wanted to obtain from Spain some reforms and concessions in favor of the Cubans, who should be allowed to occupy themselves with their own political and financial affairs, and who had rights that Spain should recognize. The relations between the two countries were cordial and General Woodford had officially informed the Spanish Government that the U. S. sincerely desired to aid Spain in restoring peace and tranquillity to the island; it desired to see the revolution concluded by means of a lasting peace. The U. S. did not desire to annex Cuba by force nor to recognise the belligerents. Another version represents Mr. McKinley, as saying that the Spanish Government should be allowed reasonable time for the trial of autonomy, and after that the intervention of the U. S. because necessary even by force, his Government would fulfil its duty despite all obstacles.

—The Message is said to have made a good impression, except on the "jingos."

—The two German cruisers before Port-au-Prince have presented an ultimatum giving the authorities 48 hours to satisfy their demands, failing which they will bombard the city. There is great excitement among the people, who advise the Government to resist. The foreign residents have taken refuge on war vessels.

—Mr. V. C. Scott O'Connor contributes to the November Century an article on "Mrs. Cameron, Her Friends, and Her Photographs." The following new anecdote of the late laureate is told: Mrs. Cameron's house at Freshwater, the rendezvous of many distinguished men and women, was in some sort the refuge of many whose heart's desire was to know Tennyson. No one she could help was ever turned away; none willingly would she have left "out of the feast of life." With Tennyson she was on terms of friendly intimacy, being in her relationship with him, as in all other matters, a law unto herself. She could, and did, say anything to him, though always within the limits set by high-bred feeling and a heart that was never at fault. One day some American acquaintances of hers, visitors at Freshwater, went up to Farringford in the expectation of seeing Tennyson. But soon after they returned to Dimbola with a rueful tale of disappointment. "Oh, he won't see you," she said. "Come with me!" And thereupon hastily throwing on her shawl, she took them straightway to Farringford, entered the open hall door, and marched them into the drawing-room where Mr. Tennyson and his wife were seated. "Alfred," she said, "these strangers come from a far country to see the lion of Freshwater; and - waving her hand - behold - a bear!" Tennyson, ever gentle with his friends, caught her direct humor and broke into a hearty laugh, receiving his visitors in the kindest manner.

BUENOS AIRES
—The official inauguration of the Electric Tramway to Flores on Saturday was a great success, everything was splendidly managed and the cars ran without any hitch. About three hundred persons attended the ceremony at 3:30 p.m. the cars starting from the corner of San Juan and Entre Rios to Flores plaza and returning within 50 minutes. A champagne lunch was offered the guests, to which ample justice was done.

—Mr. Saunders, formerly of the firm of Childs, Saunders and Co., died on Saturday in the British Hospital.

—According to a telegram from the priest of the parish of Oran, dated at Pampa Blanca and directed to the president of the Argentine Geographical Institute, the death is reported of the well known Argentine explorer, Mr. Ramon Lista, supposed to have taken place in the woods of Mira Flores. It seems that Lista succumbed from thirst, which version as yet is not confirmed, and gives rise to doubt about his death. It is known that from Oran Mr. Lista and two companions started for the

BUTTERCUP PLOT.

(A SHORT STORY)

"I'm thinking of my poor mother—and yours," she said slowly. "I do love you—I do—I do—I do—but I can't come. If they consent I'll marry you later on; that's if you still want me, Aaron."

"You know they'll never consent. Better have said at once that you didn't care for me," said Aaron bitterly.

"I love you," she said again very quietly; so quietly that Aaron did not believe her.

"Then come with me—marry me without their knowledge."

"I can't."

"You're a little coward, Jane—a silly little coward."

No answer.

"You're just simply afraid of a scolding, as you have been all your life. I should never have believed that you'd be so silly. But no—you're not so silly, are you? You'll change your mind, and not be treated like a baby. You'll change your mind, won't you, Jane?"

Still she did not answer him. She stood quite still, trembling, and with the tears rolling down her cheeks. Behind her and all about her was the tender greenery of tree and hedge, and of the meadow grass all studded with golden flowers. He looked down at her sad little face, so gentle and so meek in its expression; saw her small, red hands clasped tightly before her. What a frail, helpless little creature she seemed; how timid and how yielding! Surely, her love would overcome her fears.

"You need not answer me just at once," he said, more gently; "for I shall often see you, and when you are ready, we will go quietly and get married, and go right away together. Why don't you answer, Jane? Surely there is nothing to frighten you in this?"

She shook her head sadly.

"What! You won't even see me? Won't even promise me to be my wife one day? Jane, Jane, I thought you loved me. I know you'd do that much for me if you loved me. I know it."

She tried to speak, but he interrupted her hastily:

"Oh, I can see that you're afraid. Never mind. I would have taken care of you, and you might have trusted to me. But as it is—Good-bye, Jane."

And Aaron turned away from her, and strode across the meadow, climbed over the little locked-up gate into the garden, and was lost to sight.

What a pity he did not turn, and see poor little Jane standing there among the buttercups, with her hands clasped tightly, and her grey eyes wide open in dismay! What a pity he did not hear her moan beneath her breath:

"Oh, come back—I love you so! Come back, my heart's a-breakingle!"

A coward, he had said. Yet, at that moment when he left her, she was a coward for the first time, since, could she have found a voice, she would have called him back.

Timid and weak and frail, such indeed she was; but little Jane, with her tender love for her mother, with her brave desire that her lover should suffer no loss by loving her, and above all, with her noble sense of duty, was in reality far less a coward than the man who left her thus, and as she bowed down her head upon the little wicket-gate, and sobbed out her heart in the quiet of the Sunday evening, there was this at least to comfort her—she had done the thing which had seemed best at the moment.

Afterwards came her worst suffering: the time when, had the temptation come again, she must have yielded to it; the time when Aaron's words, with all their cruel sting, came back to wound her tender heart.

He had gone away angry with her! That was the worst part of it. He had gone away, taking her silence as cowardice, and never understanding all that had been in her heart that evening. He thought her a coward—that did not matter—but he thought she did not love him, and that mattered more than all the world to her. He never sought her; never came within sight of her; and Jane, always so ready to blame herself, thought that she really had been guilty of driving him away.

Aaron did not understand her, dearly though he had loved her. He could not believe that she could have any motive for her silence, except that she did not love him.

"If I am mistaken," he told himself, "and she does care for me, she will make an opportunity of speaking to me."

Foolish fellow! Little Jane's most prominent attribute had always been timidity. She would as soon have died as try to thrust herself upon him.

A very wet autumn and a very hard winter followed that summer. Hard for all, but hard beyond description for little Jane in her loneliness. Her father's broken leg refused to mend, and the gout and rheumatism from which he had always suffered, attacked him with renewed force. When at last he had managed to get downstairs, it was only to return to his bed after a few days, to undergo fresh torture.

January was nearly over, and frost and bitter cold continued. Everything in the Leighs' little home was at its lowest ebb, when the head of the household breathed his last. Jane and her mother were worn out with nursing, and with their efforts to keep things going. Now all was over; the querulous invalid was silent, the house in darkness, the terrible future staring them in the face.

Jane had wept and wept till she had no tears to shed. Another sorrow, besides the mourning which filled the house, lay heavy at her heart. Some neighbour, coming in to condole with the widow, had let slip a little piece of gossip which had, so far, escaped Jane's ears. Aaron, it seemed, was becoming very attentive to the pretty young widow who had lately settled in the village. Jane's heart did not break at the news; she was so full of trouble that this thing seemed hardly to touch her, and she was merely conscious of a sense of relief that now, at any rate, she should soon be far away. For she and her mother would no longer be able to remain in the old home.
