POLITICAL NOTES.

The Council of State sat on Friday. Sr. Blengio Rocca's Bill respecting Cession of Property was approved in second reading. comp eting its sanction. The rest. of the sitting was occupied with discussion of the Bill propos-ed by the Committee of Legislation, authorising the Executive to restrict the right of public meeting during the provisional period Dr. Gonzalo Ramirez defended the Bill, asserting that its effect had been greatly exaggerated and that it was necessary in the interests of public order. He denied that it would produce any reserved. that it would produce any restriction on legitimate political meetings. Dr. Acevedo Diaz, who was supported by Sr. Gil, made a vehement attack on the Bill, which he said was of a dictatorial and oppressive nature. As we were now entering on a period of general elections, he claimed allowed to political meetings and manifestations of every description. otherwise the people would have the right to complain that they were deprived of the important liberty of expression of opinion. The discussion was still proceeding when the Council adjourned, and will be resumed tomorrow.

The doubt about the post of Marine Commandant and Captain of the Port has been solved by issue of a Decree conferring the post on Col. Carlos Gaudencio, who accord pointment of Col. Gaudencio has seen well received by our native contemporaries.

It is stated that the Executive has ready the Message conveying the Budget for 1898-99, which will be forwarded to the Council of State been no Budget for three years and as the new Budget is said to contain some radical reforms and economies, it may be regarded as certain that the sanc tion will not be complete by July 1st, when it should come into force On this occasion, however, it has only one Chamber to pass instead of two, so there should not be any great delay. No particulars of the new Budget have transpired, but it is known to be based so far as administrative salarias are concerned on the most of the most of the state aries are concerned, on the report and plan prepared by the Salaries Committee appointed for the pur-pose some five months ago.

Lieut. Col. Gregorio Lamas has been persuaded to withdraw his resignation as 2nd Chief of the Military Academy, which he presented some weeks ago, and will now resume the duties of the ster's Magazine.

It is stated that Sr. Cuestas is occupied with a scheme for the reform of military justice, amending the present Military Penal Code, and also simplifying the processes before the Military Tribunals. We would much sooner hear of his being occu ied with the reform of the administration of civil law and processes, which is of enormously greater importance to the Republic in genimportance to the Republic in gen-

The term of three of the memers of the Directorate of the Bank of the Republic will expire tomor-row. It is expected that Sr. Cues-tas will apply to the Council of State for authority to reappoint the same three, so that there will be no change in the Directorate. There are vague rumors that before long a new President of the Bank may be appointed, as it is evident that the feeble health of Dr J. M. Muñoz is no longer equal to the

The Government has instructed the police authorities to prohibit the representation at the Solis Theatre representation at the Solis Theatre of a drama, written by a local author, called «Cavite,» and dealing with the battle of Manila in the present war, and which it is said is conceived in a strain highly offensive to the United States. No doubt this will be another source of institution to the Spanish of irritation to the Spanish Colony, but the Government has done perfectly right, and the resident Spaniards must learn to respect the neutrality of the Republic and cease from trying to make it a field for the exploitation of their quarrels.

Natural Gas in the Past, the Present, and the Future.

When the industrial history of the last quarter of the present cen-tury is written, one of the most in-teresting chapters will be on the discovery and development of the few large accumulations of natural gas in the United States and Can ada, and the almost criminal waste which, in spite of repeated warnings, continues to day, and apparently will continue until, within probably a few years, these reservoirs of energy will be exhausted, and communities now hustling with energy and full of the hum of industry will be sil ent and perhaps deserted. The accumulation of natural gas is analogous to that of the water supplying artesian wells, but in an inverse relation. Every richly productive gas pool is a dome or inverted trough, of porous or coarse grained sand or limestone geologic ally called an canticline, and covered always by deposit or stratum of impervious shale or similar that the fullest liberty should by formation. These anticlinals very tion. in area from a few square miles in most cases to over five thousand square miles in the case of the great Cincinnati arch which covers the Indiana and Ohio gas belts in the United States. The thickness of the strata varies in like proportion. The gas-reservoirs are in no sense cavernous, but merely more or less porous rock, im-pregnated with gas, often under soormous pressures, the more porous rocks when pierced by the drill being exhausted much more post had been offered to Dr. Carlos Lenzi, but he declined it. The apdeclined it. The aped regarding the generation and ed regarding the generation and origin of the gas and designed to account for the great pressures under which it is stored. The distribution and intimate relation of the carbon compounds all favour the theory of their generation by the decomposition of vegetable and animal organic matter under widely different variations and surroundings of temperature, pressure, and other forces and chemical influenc es, from the earliest developments of organic life to the present time. The gas is probably the product of slow primary decomposition, at low temperatures, of animal and vegetable organic matter contained in natural sediments. Its production may be seen in the shallow, undis-turbed portions of freshwater lakes...The deposits of oil and gas in the peculiar geological termations from which they are being drawn for commercial uses are due to the accidental disposition of the anticlinals and synclinals which act as reservoirs and do not necessarily indicate the restriction

> AUTO INTOXICATION FROM EXERCISE. MEDICAL PRESS

Methodical physical exercise is unquestionably a powerful factor in the maintenance of robust health but it is not everyone who is physically capable of deriving the benefit which rewards the efforts of the normal physiologically healthy individual The emunc-tory organs require careful itrain-ing before they become fitted for the morrow. There is, perhaps, no kind of physical exercise in which greater temptation exists to over strain of this kind than in cycling. Experience shows that serious physiological and visceral disturbance may be caused without anything of the nature of muscular fatigue to put the cyclist on his guard. Moreover, the effects of this variety of auto-intoxication are en-hanced by the fact that the appetite is increased, and, at a time when the body, as a whole, is more or less jaded, the stomach is called upon to discharge an unusually large amount of work. As it is, for the time being, unequal to the duty thrust upon it, the food is but partially digested and tails to undergo complete oxidation, thus turther surcharging the already overladen emunctories. Owing to the exaggerated excre-tion of water through the skin in the form of perspiration, the kidneys do not receive sufficient fluid to gush their tubular apparatus, which consequently becomes clog-ged. For the same reason there is a tendency to constipation. The nervous excitement which is associated with this form of prolonged exercise does not subside the moment the exercise is discon-tinued, and finds vent at night in the spasmodic jerks of the limbs with which cyclists are all familiar, much to their discomfort. The ra-tional treatment of this condition is simple enough, and adds material-ly to the comfort as well as to the well-being of the cyclist. On arriving at his destination the first thing to think of is a hot bath, which reduces the excitability of the muscular system and assists the skin and other organs in getting rid of their arrears of work. This, moreover, affords an interval of rest which fits the stomach for its work, but even the then first meal after a ride ought not to be too copious. The food should be light and digestible. and alcoholic beverages should be taken only in strict moderation in order not to add one more straw to the proverbial camel's back. A sufficient interval should be allowed before retiring to rest, and a short stroll in the open will accelerate digestion and avert troubled slumbers. Women, for obvious reasons are more susobvious reasons, are more sus-ceptible of these disturbances than men, and should be corres-pondingly prudent. When touring cyclists generally will derive great benefit if they avail themselves of the first half day's break in the journey to take a mild purgative, preferably of the saline type, the better to cclear the decks for ac-

THE WAR

Yesterday's war matter chiefly consisted of contradictions of the statements of the day before respecting the bombardment of San Juan of Puerto Rico, and consequently leave us completely at sea as to the real result. New York advices confirm that the forts and town suffered severely and that the American vessels were but very little injured, but they do not confirm the rendition of the town. Spanish advices exactly re-verse the statement; the forts and town were but litle injured, the losses were only eight or ten killed and wounded, and the American vessels were severely damaged The Spaniards, in fact, are celebrating the engagements at San Juan and Cienfuegos as victories for their side. In the face of such conflicting statements it is useless to repeat details, especially as some of the telegrams are obviously fab ricated (especially two long ones pretending to come from London) and enter into matters which they cannot possibly know.

The telegrams still insist that the Spanish fleet is at Fort de France (we find this is another name for Fort Royal, the seat of Government, but not the principal town, in Martinique) and have taken in coal supplies there (?) and the announcement of an important battle with Admiral Sampson's squadron is consequently expected any moment. The flying analysis under commender Winsquadron under Commodore Winfield Schley has left Hampton Roads to join Admiral Sampson. A Key West message reports the first landing of American troops in Cuba, at Cabañas, but as it adds that they immediately returned on board after having requised a Spanish attacking party, of which were killed, the affair does not seem to be important rule or any reforms until it was too late. It was the harshness of General Weyler and the cry «Cuba Española» that has lost them the colony. If two or three years ago and to the counsels given them from every side, and allowed the Cubans their independence, the whole trouble would have been ended, and Spain would have gained an ally. THE WORRY OF EYE-GLASSES.

After a long wait, Greece has at European Powers as regards inter-

When a man is so unfortunate as to be compelled to put on glasses, a new world of worry opens to him. Both spectacles and eye-glasses of all sorts are unquestionably the shyest objects in existence. In this respect they surpass matches, and even tack-hammers The late Sir Isaac Newton calculated that the chances that a pair of spectacles, if laid on a a pair of spectacles, if laid on a table or a shelf, would be found in the same place ten minutes later, were less than two in a hundrod. The moment speciacles are left alone they seek concealment, and such is their cunning that they select with unerring instinct places of concealment in which they are least likely to be disturbed.

There is the authentic case of the man who, when dining, laid his spectacles by the side of his plate, and after a prolonged search found them towards the end of the evening at the bottom of the soup tureen. There is also the equally well authenticated case of another man who was willing to swear that he had placed his spectacles in his right hand breast pocket, from which they almost immediately disappeared, to be found two days later in the hand bag of his widow ed sister. If a man possesses only one pair of glasses, he spends from an eighth to a fifth of his waking hours in searching for them. This is the reason why the hair of persons of either sex who wear glasses is invariably grey. In the case of those unhappy people who require two distinct pairs of glasses, one for reading and the other for seeing things at a distance, the hair is either snow white, or has completely disappeared There are thousands of men and women who endeavour to provide against the certainty of the frequent disappearance of their spectacles, by owning an extra pair. I know a man who, being compelled to keep two different kinds of glasses-one pair with which to read, and the other with which to observe girls on bicycles—bassuffered so severely from mislaying them that he has furnished himself with three pairs of each kind, making six pairs in all. The only result has been that he never under any circular than the never under the never than the n cumstances can find the pair which he requires.

As a further proof of the uselessness of the attempt to get the better of the elusive habits of spectacles, it should be mentioned that this same man provided himself with a pocket in the inside of his coat, designed to hold spectacles and no-thing else. More than half the time this pocket is not only devoid of spectacles, but is filled with pencils, cigars, and other things which are in no way an aid to vision.

It may be safely said that it is a mistake to own a single pair of extra glasses. Two pairs conceal themselves more effectually, if pos-sible, than one pair. Probably they connive together to outwit the tyrant man At any rate, my friend with the six pairs frequently loses the whole of them simultaneously. Those who have had experience o the uproar that the attempt to find a single pair of missing glasses brings into a household, may faint-ly imagine what is the state of that household in which the entire family is simultaneously searching for six pairs of lost spectacles.

The plan of making one's glasses fast to the buttonhole with a string only results in catching the glasses on door knobs and other projecting articles, and in the consequent breaking of both string and glasses. The only way in which a man can make sure of not losing his spectacles is by never removing them from his nose. This, however, has its inconveniences. To wash one's face satisfactorily while wearing spectacles is very difficult, and to sleep in them might give the intruding midnight burglar a sbock which would prove fatal, and so bring the spectacle-wearer into difficulties with some stern magistrate determined to uphold the rights of burglars. the rights of burglars. Moreover, a pince nez or a monocle cannot possibly be worn at night. The loss of glasses is one of those things which is inevitable, and over which, according to the advice of self-conceited and shallow men, we should abstain from worrying. As if the very fact that an evil is inevitable did not constitute the very best possible reason for

GUILLERMO SCHVVENGEL

The Defeating of Henrietta.

(A SHORT STORY)

The great organ at Haarlem was pouring forth a volume of sound into the Church of St. Bavorek. where a few American and English tourists bad gathered to hear the recital. One of the latter was still a girl in appearance, though the dress which fitted her graceful form to such perfection was that of a sidow that the state of a sidow to the state of a sidow that the s in the stage of very much mitigated

Her dark eyes wandered from an open latter in her lap, as if glad to leave it. They rested on the twenty eight columns of the church, lately divested of the whitewash with which the early Reformers had so zealously costed them. She gazed up to the roof, where hang the little ships which commemorate the vic-tories of Count William of Holland during the fitth Crusade; then she looked away to where a bullet em-bedded in the wall remained as a visible token of the Spanish siege. The Dutch bave had a hard fight for their liberty, she mused, and they value it accordingly. Now that I am at last free, why should I go back to England, and submit myself again to Henrietta's yoke? She wants to lead me into captivity, and so she can afford to be very affectionatejust now,» glancing again at the letter, and reading:

«When do you return? Every one is asking for you. It is such a brilliant sesson, and as more than a year has elapsed since your sad bereavement, dear Sybil, you might begin to take part in a few gaieties.

Sybil folded up the letter impa-

«Oh. Henrietta, what a bypoorite you are!» she murmured. «You know better than any one else what my life with George was, but you must still observe the conventionalities. When you made me give up the man I cared for, to marry the most unpopular person in town, at eighten, you told every one that it was a love match. Now, after six years, you maintain appearances No, Henrietts, I am not going back! It is May time; the tulips are a-bloom, and I am enjoying a spell of liberty, for the first time in my life. I have done worn crape for a year; I have done all that could be expected of me. I bave no estate to keep up, no ties of any sort in England. This wander-ing life suits me and dear old Lammie to perfection, so why should I relinquish it?>

The organ died away into silence, and rousing her companion — a meek, middle-aged woman, who was profuse in her apologies for having slept during the music --Lady Armitage left the oburch.

Outside they stopped to look at the statue of Laurence Coster, supposed inventor of the art of print-chow shocked you used to be with me in the old school room days when I wished that he had never been born! I attributed all my trials to him-poor Laurence Coster! You and I never thought that we should stand by his statue together, did we,

Miss Lambert shook her head.
«No, indeed, my dear; I should have lived and died without seeing anything of the world, but for your goodness to me. This year abroad

"Goodness! Why, what could I do without you? I shall never be able to make up for all my naughtiness in the old days at Grey Towers.

A passer-by paused at the sound of her words, and came up to them with a smile on his pleasant face.

*Lady Armitage! I thought I was not mistaken; and Miss Lambert! How glad I am to see you again! It is six years since we met, and I have been in India for five; a large slice out of one's life. One hardly expects to be remembered. Are you staying

«No, we are going on to Amster-dam this evening,» Sybil answered, finding her voice with difficulty, and looking nervously at the speaker. «I am staying there too, so we shall meet. You are driving out to Bloomendaal now? Au revoir. >

And belping them into their carriage, he turned away.

«Cap ain Hunter is very little changed,» observed Miss Lambert.

«He looks older, of course, but still, I should bave known bim anywhere I wonder if he is married? He did not say 'we,' but 'I,' so perhaps he is Lady Armitage scarcely replied to ber companion's prattle. She sat in silence as they drove past mile after mile of nursery gardens, where tulips blazed, and hyacinths scented the breeze; past the country houses of rich Haarlem merchants; past flat, green meadowe, where black cattle stood knee-deep in the long grass; past the canals, where heavy barges crawled on their way to the sea, scaecely disturbing the placid life of the swans, which swam lazily to and fro, with broods of dusky organets. Sybil did not beed the scenery; her thoughts were away in the past. Instead of pollard willows, an avenue of English caks arose before her mind's eye. She saw the stately grey towers of her early home rath-er than the green wooden houses, which looked as if they had come from a toy-shop. She was living over again the short romance of her girlaood.

«Has he forgotten me?» she mur-mured to berself. «Dos« he rememer me only as a pleasant ac-quantunce? I can never forget. Every hour of those few weeks a ands out in my memory as if it were only yesterday—from the day when I first met him and it we aid when I first met him notil we said good-bye for ever. But for Henrietta, we might have been so happy. Why did she spoil my life? Mrs. Manuering had certainly played a leading role in the drama of her young stepsister's destiny.

She had no children of her own, and was given complete coutrol of the little orphan, who became her charge at the age of seven.

Sybil was then an indulged and wayward child, but a short experience of Henrietta's discipline altered her surprisingly.

tered her surprisingly.

Only to kind, sympathetic Miss Lambert did any sign of the original Syhil show itself; her love made up in some measure for Henrietta's coldness, which was never relaxed.
