British Engineers Accept Change in Working Conditions

BRITISH AGRICULTURAL SHOWS CANCELLED

London, June 25th

The cancellation of a number of agricultural shows including the Royal Warwick Show, which should take place on July 17th, is threatened on account of the recent outbreak of aftosa. Another case is reported in Lancashire which brings the total number of cases up to thirty six throughout the country since June 17th, thirty one of which have been traced to cattle imported from Ireland.

GERMAN - RUMANIAN COMMERCIAL TREATY

Berlin, June 25th

The Commercial Treaty between Germany and Rumania, which will be signed shortly at Geneva, provides that Germany shall reduce her tariffs on Rumanian barley 50 o/o and on maize 60 o/o, while Rumania is to lower tariffs on industrial products, which will benefit all countries having most favoured nation treaties with Rumania.

BRITISH ENGINEERS ACCEPT CHANGE IN WORKING CONDITIONS

London, June 25th

The Confederation of Executives of Engineering Unions in London, by a large majority, accepted the employers' modified proposals for changes in working conditions and overtime rates. The new terms come into operation as from July 6th and by this means peace has been preserved in the industry.

INVESTIGATING THE ST. PHILIBERT DISASTER

St. Nazaire, June 25th

An investigation has been started to inquire into the St. Philibert disaster, and the Ministry, the Merchants Marine and Maritime Authorities of Nantes and St. Nazaire, are collaborating in the enquiry.

TORNADO IN RIO GRANDE DO SUL

Rio de Janeiro, June 25th

A report from Rio Grande do Sul states that a tornado in the neighbourhood of Sao Luiz dos Carceres has destroyed thirty houses in the city, killing four persons and injuring twenty five.

CIVIL SERVANTS SALARIES REDUCTION IN RUSSIA

Moscow, June 25th

The salaries of Civil Servants, which were reduced fifteen per cent a month ago, have been further reduced to 20 o/o owing to the tense situation caused by the Budget.

THE 15th INTERNATIONAL COTTON CONGRESS

Paris, June 25th

The 15th International Cotton Congress has opened here with twenty two nations attending. The Congress is being held in an endeavour to stimulate the consumption of cotton textiles.

PROJECTED NEW TRANS-ANDINE RAILWAY

Santiago de Chile, June 25th

The "Diario Ilustrado" states that the decree has not yet been signed which concedes authorization to the firm of Careceda and Garces to construct a railway between Antofagasta and Salta. The firm in question has undertaken to construct the line, investing in the project sixty million pesos without any cost to the Chilean Government, in return for the right to exploit the line for a certain number of years, after which the line would be handed over to the Government.

THE BRITISH EMPIRE WOOL CONFERENCE

Malbourne, June 24th

The Chairman, Sir Graham Waddell, at the opening of the Empire Wool Conference, declared that if the policy of co-ordinating offerings throughout the Empire were adopted it would be absolutely necessary that all the countries concerned adhere to the programme and thus avoid violent and harmful fluctuations of prices.

Sir John Higgins, Chairman of the British and Australian Wool Realization Association, submitted a plan to create a growers organization for the purpose of securing the central control of orderly marketing without government interference.

The textile factories have reopened but very few employees have returned to work, the majority of the workers preferring to continue the strike.

UNIQUE MACHINERY MAKES AUTO TIRES

Development of machinery to do jobs more efficiently and better or to accomplish a unique mechanical operation is a function of every industry. Tire manufacturers long have respected this function and today maintain extensive mechanical laboratories in which new devices and improvements are fabricated.

The B. F. Goodrich Rubber Company in Akron, Ohio, has contributed many revolutionary machines to the industry. It maintains a staff of engineers and in addition every employee of the company assists in the suggestion and development of new ideas. These suggestions are submitted to the development department where technicians study them and work out new attachments or devise complete machines.

This department is operated similarly to the research division of the Goodrich Company. All ideas submitted by employees or persons

And right there was the great problem for self-propelling vehicles. No mechanism made could withstand the jolting of old fashioned wheels on old fashioned roads. That's why train and trams, running on smooth rails, came first.

When the 'horseless carriage' was invented, there were carriage tires of solid rubber waiting for it. They were all right for the snail's pace of first cars. But not until the introduction of the pneumatic tire, was the modern motor car, of modern speed and power, a practical possibility.

And today, we find that our super-cars float along on balloon tires, oblivious of bump or shock.

So you see, all the comfort, safety and convenience of modern motoring is actually made possible by these Silvertowns your Goodrich dealer sells!

Most of us take tires for granted as long as they're functioning well. And that's just as it should be.

But did you ever stop to think of the part your tires actually play in this miraculous business of mo-not affiliated with the organization are studied and if the suggestion can be adapted to the rubber industry it is worked out in the laboratory and given severe trial.

This plan, combined with its chemical research activities, has enabled the Goodrich Company to contribute many improvements to the industry and to manufacture better tires and tubes at the lowest cost in the history of the industry.

The Automobile marks the difference between this century and the last. Yet few of us realize the automobile would be impossible without one other thing: the automobile tire!

Consider vehicles of two hundred years ago. Even the gilded coaches of monarchs of France would seem like torture chambers now, to the humblest modern man. Because stage coaches ran on rims, hard as rock. They literally shook themselves and their passengers to pieces.

modern transportation? Think it over a moment... and you'll see that tires do three all-important things... all the time.

In the first place, your tires provided that 'traction' or 'pull', which every self-propelled vehicle must have. Power in a car is applied through its wheels... and its tires. That's where those big sturdy cleats at the edge of a Silvertown tread come in. They grab the road and pull!

Then again, tires must cushion the car and its load. Without cushioning, the best-made mechanism in the world would shake itself apart in a week... not to mention the passengers. The high-speed driving of to-day would be unthinkable without the protection pneumatic tires give.

Finally, your tires are made to protect not only your car but the highway you ride upon. Did you ever think of that? A road travelled by a hundred donkey carts

It was really admirable work to win after rain had restricted play to two hours on the first day and three on the second.

Cromb, who is fast-medium right hand, started the collapse by taking five of the first six wickets for 15 runs, although one would hardly have thought the pitch would suit him.

He swung-in from leg and was quick off the pitch, and he did enough to cause his doings to be followed with more than usual interest.

Marritt, who is always likely to prove deadly, had seven for 28 in the follow-on, in which we were out for 48 in 65 minutes. Chapman for the second time in the game, fell to the first ball he received.

THE FUTURE OF AIR WARFARE

By A. E. Blake

Even during the primitive raids of the first world war it was not uncommon for the London anti-aircraft guns alone to fire a quarter of a million pounds' worth of ammunition in a single night. An improved form of wire 'apron' defences suspended from small balloons able to endure rare atmospheres might be used to force the attackers to fly as high as possible, but, except for a few 'planes with specific objectives, they would probably require no such encouragement.

Before 1950 some as yet un-conceived invention may help to redress the hopeless inadequacy of ground defences against attacking aircraft but, as far as can now be determined, the only effective defence will be to attack the raiders as far as possible from their objective, to break up their formations and concentrate a preponderance of fire on the scattered units with the object of forcing them down before they can effect any harm even by their involuntary crashing in defeat.

But how hopeless a task it seems. It will be guerilla warfare in three dimensions, with mists, fogs, clouds and night-time to furnish natural screens behind which to lurk and, no doubt, artificial smoke-screens to supplement them. Even in a clear sky there is nothing more difficult than to detect and to maintain under observation a high-flying aeroplane, moving with incredible swiftness through a medium that, by its uniformity, affords no 'landmarks' by which a particular patch in which the aeroplane was once perceived may be remembered.

It is almost inconceivable that the whole or, indeed, any substantial portion of such a formidable fleet as could comparatively cheaply be despatched, could be forced down before doing damage, even, if a greatly preponderating defending force is assumed. The memorandum drawn up by the British Air Staff in France, in September, 1916, which expressed the opinion that it is utterly impossible to prevent hostile machines from crossing the line "simply because the sky is too large to defend", is confirmed for existing circumstances by a remark in a paper read by Squadron Leader B. E. Sutton before the Royal United Services Institution in 1922. "The impossibility of preventing single machines or even all hostile patrols from crossing the lines", he said "cannot be realised without comprehending the immensity of the air and the difficulty from the air of seeing other machines in it". Nothing which has been disclosed in the technical development of the last seven years gives reason to reconsider these judgments.

All factors indicate that the attackers would be able to inflict more loss than they themselves would risk, besides immobilising a vast defensive organisation. If a clear preponderance of air power were not possessed by the defence there would then be nothing to prevent the raiders from proceeding methodically with their plan of operation. Each unit would complete its allotted task, the while maintaining wireless communication with the directing "flagship" for the fleet would be flexibly centralised if hostile "jamming" could be prevented. In all directions they would speed on their missions, each unit accompanied by its protective fighting 'planes.

And soon the sky would be red with the light of a thousand fires and the shattering roar of explosions, would, for a while, be almost continuous. Every now and then a machine would streak across the sky in flames. Then, most of its objectives reached, the units would reform into a solid, if diminished phalanx, the course would be shaped for home, and the raiders, flying the higher for the loss of their loads, would fight their way out again.

It is clear that the only defence that exists against such an attack is the unchallenged mastery of the air. The enemy's aircraft must never be allowed to leave their hangars.

GREEN TIMBER

—BY—

James Oliver Curwood

Although first impressions are so often wrong that their lack of trustworthiness has become very nearly proverbial, there was no danger in this instance that Allan would misjudge the untidy person hebeheld, clad in oddly assorted clothes, who moved about with a shambling, almost reluctant, walk.

The station agent's unkempt grey hair, escaping from the edges of an ancient cap, was quite in harmony with the apparent hesitancy which characterized each movement, but somehow the sturdy chin and friendly brown eyes, that were flecked with bits of blue, almost instantly won recognition and appreciation of Lucky's underlying quality of good fellowship which was forever prompting him to extend his hand in friendly, cheerful aid.

"Any road you pick will take you into such timber as we have left, but you'll still find a little snow back in the woods, though it won't last long now", he told Allan, on learning that they were not bound for any of the clubs or homes along the Au Sable. "Kind o' hard tramping for the child", he said half to himself. "Is she going in with you?"

"Frankly, I don't know just where we're going. We've both had rather more of the city than is good for us, and I'm now determined that we're going to try the wilderness for awhile", said Allan. "I want her with me, and yet I'm afraid she can't stand the walking at first".

Lucky paused a moment longer than his ordinarily deliberate movements would account for, while he further appraised Allan. Here was a decent sort of chap, obviously there to remain and without thought of a weekend booze party, who knew little of the surrounding country and had a peaked-looking kiddie with him, probably his little daughter. A most unusual pair!

"I'll tell you what I'll do", he said, hurrying them into his office as fast as Lucky ever did hurry to get anywhere. "These folks will be glad to see you. Over in there a few settlers struggle along for a living, too stubborn to admit failure or too poor to go away, but once in a while there are some who have learned the secret of how to really live up here and John Renny and his wife are such people".

He handed Allan a slip of yellow paper on which he had scrawled: "This man is my friend. Lucky."

The first red streak of the dawn had come, and now a few sleepy robins and catbirds, as well as the chickadees and flickers, were rousing themselves in answer to the summons of the approaching morn. Down the one paved street of the little village, and within a very short distance, Allan could see the edge of the young growth, the memory of which had drawn him away from the senseless hurly-burly of the city. "Thank you very much", he said to Lucky, as he tucked Peter's little hand snugly under his arm and held but his own to the extraordinary station master. By the handclasp then exchanged between these two odd persons in the grey dawn of Michigan's northland there was sealed a friendship destined to become a legend in the cut-over country.
