FOREIGNERS AND POLITICS.

(We condense the following moderate and sensible article from a recent number of the B. A. Hera d. Much of it is equally applicable in this city.)

We observe a very moderate and candid article in a recent number of the Standard advising foreigners to obscain from a too active participa-tion in the approaching presidential campaign, unless prepared to acquire that right by becoming naturalized citizens. We are quite in accord with the general tone of that advice, so far as relates to practical politics which urge the claims and work for the interests of some particular canthe interests of some particular candidate or party. Inasmuch as the alien is not to vote for or against any candidate, he would be following the spirit of that disabling provision if he abstained from from speech, scheme and influence as well as vote, and for disabling law which prevents an alien from voting for a candidate should prevent his participation in saidelec-tion in any other form, even though no statue law could reach the act. To this extent we are quite in agreement with our esteemed col-league, but beyond this there is a wide world of politics in which the alien has as much right, interest and even duty in participating as any native could have. The Constitution clothes the alien with all the rights of the citizen except that of the voting franchise and the right to hold office, which is its concomitant Personal or party politics and the selection of party or candidate, belong exclusively to those who are to vote for them, but what kind of candidates any party should adopt, what principles it should espouse, what theory of government is soundest are, according to Constitutional prescriptions, questions that concern the inhabitants and not merely the the inhabitants and not merely the citizens of this Republic, and this same Constitution also declares that the *inhabitants* (not citizens) shall be guaranteed the right to hold and advocate their opinions. It follows, therefore, that the foreigner has every right to present and urge his views on all or any public questions, including politics, which, after all, constitute only one phase of political economy. The alien, then, may urge the nomination of the property of the pr nation and election of men of honest character, leaving the voter to exercise his own judgment in the exercise in sown judgities and officer. The alien may urge the adoption of any course or policy of government which he thinks would prove of benefit or value to the country, in fact, he may participate fully and freely in all discussions way to personal enmity friendship, that soundness and prudence should characterize the management of long list of topics which touch equally the citizen and the alien, and in which they all alike have by law, usage and good taste, the right of the inscriptions. Although not so in which they all alike have by law, usage and good taste, the right of full participation. We also quite agree with our colleague that no good and much harm may come from thoughtless and often intemperate remarks made by foreigners in public places concerning public men and matters, and we regret to say that the offensive habit is rather too common and pronounced for good taste or fairness.

by the fees and stamps necessary for the inscriptions. Although not so stated, we presume this implies an increase in the said fees, as, judging from the number of registrations made in the less populated districts, the present revenues would never support especial officers.

—Dr. Requena y Garcia is spoken of in many quarters as a very probable candidate for the Ministry of The Budget, 1891-2.

According to custom, the Minister of Finance has issued a circular to the other Ministries, calling their attention to the face that according to law the General Budget for 1891-2, which should come into force on July 1, 1891, should be forwarded to the Legislative Chambers for sanction on or before April 1, and there-fore the Ministries are requested to prepare and forward their respective estimates as soon as possible. In the drawing up of these estimates they are asked to observe the strictest and severest economy possible, com-patible with the present financial situation and with good service in public administration.

Apropos of hiscircular a difficulty has arisen respecting the Minister of Foment, to whom a copy was addressed in due course, The Ministry was created some weeks ago, but up to the present there are neither Minister, officials nor offices, matters remaining exactly as they were before the decree was issued. Consequently the porter entrusted with the delivery of the circular is at a loss to know what to do with it. Cosi va il mundo.

SUNDRIES. -Notwithstanding the critical state of affairs in Buenos Aires, our exchanges thence were uncommonly dull yesterday, and do not even contain a reference to the lively scenes said to have taken place in Rosario and Cordoba. Perhaps the estate of siege» also includes a suppresion of such items. We much miss our lively friend the Defensa del Pueblo, temporarily suppressed. If the Standard is not drawing upon If the Standard is not drawing upon its imagination, (asit frequently does) the city has felt a beneficial effect from what in most places is considered a great trouble. Is there not a book about «Brave Little Boys»? If so, a new chapter should be added in favour of little William Hayward, of Harpinger, near Folkestone, who so narrowly escaped from the terrible accident which destroyed in an instant his father and mother, together with their infant child. The cotage of the Hayward family was built under a broken hill, that rose almost perpendicularly close behind it to a height of nearly 150 feet. Habitations in similarly perilous situations may in similarly perilous situations may often be seen close to cliffs by the sea-shore, an in old quarries and marlpies; and it is curious how little their inhabitants appear to take heed of their treacherous character till some catastrophe befalls them. The Hayward family, being altogether six in number, retired to rest on Tuesday night as usual, suspecting nothing; yet already their doom was sealed. High over head in an arable field behind the summit of the clay cliff a deep indentation, had formed wherein water had accumulated. The frost had been at work widening and deepening the breach, and that night there was a thaw and a heavy fall of rain which rushed down into the gully. Suddenly, at about an hour after midnight, there was a tremendous crash. The great landslip descended like an avalanche burying and like an avalanche, burying and sweeping the cottage across aroadway and down a further depth of thirty fees into a field. Silent for everfees into a field. Silent for ever-more were the poor man, his wife, and their infant child; but in another room little Willie, a boy of eight, was miraculously preserved. He succeeded in forcing his way through the thatch of the roof of the shattered costage. The sky was pitch dark, the rain falling in torrens, the wind the rain falling in torren's, the wind blowing hard, but the boy, though stunned and bruised, was mindful of his two little sisters-one aged ten, and the other only one year and and eight months old—who, like himself, had sustained only slight injuries. The courageous little fellow having expricated these two, matched up the younger sister and carried her to the nearest house, a quarter of a mile distant, where he procured assistance. Such is the simple story of the stout heart and the thoughtful care exhibited under these appalling conditions by a boy eight years old.

Speaking at Shoreditch last night, Sir Charles Russell, referring to Ireland's demand for Home Rule, said there could be no doubt that, in the broad line of its own destinies and fortunes, a nation had never committed a permanent error. General Booth has addressed a letter to the Lord Mayor in reply to the denial that on a recent night 164 Tnames bridges. He explains that the phrase son the bridges was used in his first letter instead of a the immediate approach to to the bridge, and maintains that the distress was not over-stated by him. The Earl of Aberdeen visited Glasgow yesterday as mediator be tween the men and the railway comtween the men and the railway companies, and the result of his interview with Mr. Thompson, of the Caledonian line will probably be made known to-day. Mr. Thompson expressed his readiness to confer with any two of the men if they were accompanied by Lord Aberdeen, but declined to recognise the official position of Mr. Tait or Mr. Harfeld, At their mass meetings both in Edinburgh and meetings both in Edinburgh and Glasgow the men reaffirmed the policy of no surrender.

Lord Derby has written a letter in which he says that he is opposed to the proposal for giving power to the Board of Trade to determine disputes between employers and work-men by compelling the parties to accept its arbitration. Such powers would mean regulation of the rate of wages by a Government department, and would destroy the freedom of employers and employed to make their own terms.

The empire of the penny is rapidly extending. Regarding Penny Banks we have lately given some cheering news. The penny violin classes of the Midland Institute are stated to be a great success; a later development still is the Penny Gymnasium, starfed by the Birmingham Athletic started by the Birmingham Athletic Club, who for the nominal fee of a Club, who for the nominal fee of a penny a week generously undertake to provide instruction and secure a thorough physical training for youths who could not otherwise command this advantage. The Birmingham lads appear to have hastened to avail themselves of this opportunity. Upwards of one hundred attended the classes on Toursday evening. They are describ-

It is not the gardeners and the builders only who have felt the influences of the recent long frost Many trades and industries which might be supposed to be tolerably independent of the state andependent of the state of the thermometer, have really experienced the effects of the prolonged cold weather in more than one way. The haircutters have almost laid their soissors aside for the last nine weeks. Everybody has been afraid of catching cold, and so has thought it just as well to reach the contract of th cold, and so has thought it just as well to postpone hair-cutting till milder weather sets in. Eveng shaving has been checked, partly because beards do not grow so fast as in the summer and partly because some people become careless of personal appearance in such a cheerless time as we have had of late. Once let the sunshine come with a really genial warmth, and all the world will be wishing to have its hairs cut. Shaving, also, will then become not only "easy," but regular. Umbrellamakers too have had a bad time of it. People will provide against rain, but People will provide against rain, but they will not as a rule carry umbrellas in case of snow, which can easily be shaken off the outwraps. How the theatres have suffered in what ought to be their most prosperous time everybody knows. Tailors again, have not been doing very well. again, have not been doing very well. In cold, dismal days people bring out their rough, thick clothing, kept in reserve for such exceptional times; not till Easter is approaching will the young man's fancy lightly turn to the tailor's pattern book. Tayerns, restaurants, and purveyors of food in general have, on the other hand, had no reason to complain. Bitter cold weather sharpens the Bitter cold weather sharpens the appetite, and so, at all events, it makes good for some trades.

Scatt's Emulsion

This medicine is playing a great part in modern therapeutics.

(BEWARE OF THE SO-CALLED «SCOTT'S FORMULA»)

Almeria, June 6, 1887.

For some time past I have been For some time past I have been using Scort's EMULSION with happy results in those cases in which I formerly used cod liver oil, and I must testify that patients, and especially children, take it more easily, as the flavor is not repugnant, nor does the mixture produce gastro-intestinal alterations. I am better satisfied every day with the results of this remedy, which is playing a grand part, especially in the treatment of children.

THE SECOND MASTER.

Dr. Stamford, however, chose to that his eyes to the truth, and request-ed his wife to include the Oswalds

The answer which followed in neat but somewhat out-of-date, Italian handwriting, displeased Mrs. Stam-ford not a little She characterised its wording as so wanting in courtesy as to verge upon positive rudeness.

«Mr. and Mrs. Oswald beg to thank Dr. and Mrs. Stamford for their invitation, which they will not be able to accept.»

The absence of the usual adjectives and of any conventional expression of regret perhaps excused the indignation displayed by the head master's wife on the occasion. The note certainly tended to accentuate the incipient dislike which she had previously entertained towards the

«It is certainly curt,» admitted the peace-loving Doctor, as he glanced over the few brief lines.

«I cannot imagine how any woman who has been accustomed to decent society could bring herself to write in such a manner. She must either be utterly ignorant or wilfully inso-lent, oried his wife excitedly.

«After all, my dear, she thanks us for the invitation; she has merely omitted a few customary expres-sions which, though commonly used, are purely conventional, and convey are purely conventional, and convey no actual meaning. Dr. Stamford observed middly, hoping to throw oil upon the troubled waters.

«Ot course that is all very true; still, Mrs. Oswald is the first I ever met with who threw those forms aside. My opinion is she goes as near to deliberate rudeness as she dares, so as to prevent a likelihood of the invitation being repeated.»

As time went on the Oswalds, their peculiarities and their odd mode of life, became a favourite mode of life, became a favourite topic over afternoon tea tables, but, werenely regardless of the conjectures concerning them, they took their own course, and at the end of a twelvementh were as much of an enigma as ever.

With two exceptions Mrs. Oswald had long since ceased to receive visitors, or rather to decline to do so. To oblige her husband, Mrs. Stamford had certainly made a second call, and although, probably on account of her connection with the school, she had not been repulsed in actual words she had experienced such chilling politeness that she utterly refused to repeat the experiment a third time. Other ladies had met with worse treatment. The Miss Stones, who, though still young and pretty, had braved Eastminster censure by continuing to live unchaperoned in their father's house after their loss, and who had given further offence by not altogether closing their doors to their bachelor friends, told an odd

As they had stood upon the steps of the pretty little house in the Close waiting to pay their first call, which, waiting to pay their first call, which, owing to their having been absent from home, was considerably behind date, Mrs. Oswald had appeared over the blind of the projecting bow-window. She had drawn back without any sign of recognition, and although the ladies had lingered a while, in expectancy of a response while, in expectancy of a response to their ring, none had been vouch-safed. They had turned away dis-comitted and indignant, and the tale further served to strengthen the flood of gossip and conjecture concerning the second master and Mrs. Oswald.

It indeed seemed inexplicable. The Oswalds had come under good auspices, and had found the doors of auspress, and had found the doors of the most cultured and pleasant set open to them, but they had delibe-rately repulsed all advances, and persistently declined to visit, and although in possession of good means, they were without servants, continuing to avail themselves of the services of the charwoman before

Dr. Stamford and his younger daughters were the only persons who passed their portals. It was almost an impossibility to exclude the former, and the girls having been sent once with a message from their father had found Mrs. Oswald surprisingly pleasant; she expressed a hope that they would come in sometimes; although she was herself unable to pay formal calls, she would be glad to see them Alice and Evelyn were a little flattered, perhaps, by the exception made in the favour; at all events, they occasionally availed themselves of the invitation invitation.

Sometimes, though very rarely, Mr. Oswald consented to take supper at the Doctor's after Sunday evening service at the cathedral, the day on which the family dined early; but nothing seemingly induced him to form one of the guests at more cere-monious gatherings.

The local gossips indulged in the wildest conjectures. As time went on, the rumours centred upon the personality of the late Mr. Oswald, personality of the late Mr. Oswald, or, to speak more correctly, his want of personality. Nothing indeed was known concerning that gentleman, who was presumably dead, nor the position he had occupied, nor the date of his departure from this sphere. There was no trace of mourning, still less of widowhood, in Mrs. Oswald's garb. Alice and Mrs. Oswald's garb. Alice and Evelyn,cross-questioned assomething of authorities on the subject, could not say that they had ever heard the lady make any reference to her husband.
One memorable day a young Lieutenant quartered in the place caused a terrible flutter round an afternoon teatable during a large garden-party.
He declared that he had heard it asserted in Eastminster, but of course he could not guarantee the truth he could not guarantee the truth, that Mr. Oswald, senior, had made a hasty and ignominious exit from the world, as a penalty for having

brought about the death of his first wife by the administration of slow doses of strychnine.

No one was able to trace this report to any definite source, and, as the Lieutenant's regiment was just then ordered abroad, it is probable that the whole story was a production of his fertile brain, nttered possibly more from sheer love of fun, and in the hope of causing a sensation, than from malice atorethought. Anyhow the rumour died hard. Certainly no one could recall the name the name of Oswald as figuring so conspicuously in the annals of crime; but then, as was quickly suggested, the appellation was probably assumed.
