REGULATIONS FOR THE THEATRES.

The Government has just approved a lengthy set of new Regulations, consisting of no fewer than 80 Articles, divided into 12 Chapters, prepared by the Municipality for application to Theatres and similar places of public amusement, and which will come into force in ten days' time.

Some of these Regulations are sensible enough, though by no means perfect, others are puerile, and others, again, are framed in obvious and complete ignorance of theatrical necessities and customs. This latter is the result of the Regulations having been drawn up by a body of men who, however good their intentions, have no practical knowledge of the matter for which they are legislating. The average Municipal Councillor here, as we remarked some time ago, has about as much practical knowledge of the working of a theatre, as a Durham heifer has of the use of a theodolite, and consequently makes himself either ridiculous or obnoxious when he attempts to legislate for them. If an experienced and practical theatrical or stage manager had been consulted before the regulations were drawn up, they might have been greatly improved. This ought to have been done, and we are rather surprised that the Government did not insist on its being done before giving approval to the Regulations. However, it is by no means the only example in this part of the world of men legislating on matters of which they are totally ignorant—it would be hardly too much to say that this is the rule rather than the exception.

The provisions for the safety of spectators and actors in case of fire or panic—the latter for the greater and more frequent danger of the two—are still imperfect in fact hardly touched upon. No relation is established, as there should be, between the holding capacity of the theatre, and the number and width of the doors, passages, and staircases, a matter in which every theatre in the city is defective. No provision is made, as there should be, for direct and ready exits from the stage for the persons engaged in the performance. Not a single word is said about sanitary arrangements in any part of the building, or of the safety and sanitation of the dressing rooms for the artists, both important points. It is not forbidden, as it should be, to place chairs in the gangways and passages, a frequent and serious source of danger. It is not made compulsory, as it should be, to provide cloak rooms for the use of both sexes, a matter in which all the theatres here except the Solis are deficient. It should be forbidden to the policemen and firemen to station themselves as they generally do, in the doorways, entrances and passages, where they interfere with the free movement of the public, and in the wings where they interfere with the movement of the stage. The policemen are a special nuisance in this respect, and it is both ridiculous and an insult to the public to see one or two policemen stationed at each of the entrances could not be trusted to take their seats and witness the performance without police interference. They are neither useful nor ornamental there, but merely obstructive, and they should be ordered into the background until their services are really required.

Art. 71 makes obligatory the reservation at every function of a "first class box" for the free use of the Municipality. This is merely blackmail. The members of the Municipality have no more claim to free entrance to the theatres, than the members of the Executive Power or of the Legislative Chambers. A perpetual free pass to all parts of the building for the official Inspector of Theatres is the most they have the right to claim, and the Managers would be justified in refusing to give them more. If the members of the Municipality want to amuse themselves at the theatre, let them pay like the rest of the public.

Whilst legislating for the theatres and places of amusement, the Municipality entirely overlooks the churches, which are equally places of public resort crowded at times, and liable to alarms of fire and panics. Most, if not all, of these have very insufficient modes of exit, and such as they have are blocked with heavy curtains and with narrow doors not always opening outward. Even now there is building in Calle Cerrito, next door to San Francisco, a church or chapel, large enough to hold 800 or 900 people, the only exit from which is by a narrow passage hardly broad enough for four persons abreast. This is highly dangerous and should not be permitted; the effects of a panic in such a building when full would be terrible. Since the Municipality is so fond of interfering, and since it is certainly part of its duty to provide for the safety of the public, let it cast an eye to this and other churches which certainly require regulating quite as much as the theatres.

There are several other points on which we might comment, but we fear they would not interest our readers. On the whole we certainly cannot congratulate the Municipality on their work.

Art. 39 says, "The presentation of works on the stage must be adjusted to the letter and spirit of the author, and without previous consultation of the authorities no additions or suppressions may be made in the same, even when sanctioned by custom." This is simply imbecile, and would make any theatrical manager split his sides with laughter. It is a matter in which the Municipality can have absolutely no authority whatever and the regulation is only introduced to be disregarded. We can imagine the face of, say, Sr. Novelli or Sr. Mariani, if told that they had to obtain Municipal permission before making an alteration in one of their plays, or of Sr. Iamagno sending in an application (on stamped paper) to be allowed to omit ten bars from an aria. Equally childish is Art. 40 establishing that Municipal approval is necessary for the introduction of verses, songs, paragraphs, etc. The Municipality only makes itself ridiculous by introducing such regulations, and it is safe to say that not a single manager will be found to pay the slightest attention to them. They are matters within the control of the stage manager and of no one else.

Some feeble regulations are introduced for the regulation of acrobatic exercises and the exhibition of wild beasts. One which might very well be added is omitted, namely the prohibition of children under 14 years of age taking part in dangerous acrobatic or circus performances, a regulation which is now strictly enforced in most civilized countries, and which is certainly wanted here where we have had to censure such performances more than once.

Art. 67, § 11, forbids the wearing of hats and caps once the curtain is raised. Not a word is said to explain if this is intended to apply to both sexes or to men only. If it is intended to prohibit ladies wearing their bonnets, all we can say is that the public are not yet prepared for so radical a change, though it would be warmly welcomed by the male portion of the audience.

The members of the Municipality have no more claim to free entrance to the theatres, than the members of the Executive Power or of the Legislative Chambers. ### POLITICAL NOTES.

The second discussion in detail of the Budget was continued in the Council of State on Tuesday. Some further progress was made, and it was resolved to hold daily sittings until the discussion is concluded, which it is expected will be the case this week. It was also resolved that in future the sittings should be from 3 for 3.30 to 5 p. m. suppressing the usual fifteen minutes interval.

The silver question continues to occupy considerable attention. There are, more or less, four millions of silver coin in circulation, corresponding to the emissions of 1879, 1893 and 1895. On the 31st of August the Bank of the Republic had in circulation minor (silver) notes to the value $1,704,189. Even supposing that part of the silver coin had been withdrawn as reserve against these notes, the minor circulation would still be over 5 millions. Since then it would appear that the Government has greatly increased the circulation by paying the August budget mainly in minor notes. Thus the amount has become obviously excessive for a population of barely 850,000, and of limited commercial or industrial movement. The discount on silver, which was 1.20 to 1.80 % in 1895, 1.20 to 3.20 in 1896 and 1.40 to 2 in 1897 has now risen to 3.50 and threatens to go higher. The Chamber of Commerce asks that the Government should intervene to restrict the minor emission of the Bank of the Republic, and at all events, make it more proportionate to the major emission. At present the Bank has in circulation, roughly, $1,700,000 or more of minor notes to only $1,300,000 of major notes convertible in gold. It is true that it is one of the chartered privileges of the Bank to emit up to 50 % of its paid up capital in minor notes, convertible in gold or silver at option of the Bank, but it is to be supposed that it will employ this privilege with consideration to the wants and capacities of the market, and not make it abusive. (If we remember aright this privilege was one of the points combated by the press as dangerous when the Charter of the Bank was first being discussed in 1895.) The Government is known to be turning its attention to the matter, but we cannot yet say what course it will take.

The Marquis of Malaspina, the new Italian Minister to this Republic, arrived yesterday, and his official reception will take place at 3.30 p. m. to day.

Festivities on H. M. S. "Clyde."

On September 15th, on R.M.S. Clyde, during her outward voyage, a very pretty and most successful fancy dress ball was held. All the dancers appeared at dinner in their costumes, and their several entrances into the saloon were greeted with the applause they so justly invited. At 8.30 p. m. the whole passenger list adjourned to the lower saloon, which had been cleared for dancing and had been tastefully decorated with flags under the superintendence of Captain Powles. The carefully chosen programme was as follows:—Lancers, Valse, Pas de Quatre, Valse, Polka.—Interval.—Lancers, Washington Post, Valse, Highland Schottische and Galop. Among the dancers could be noticed Mrs. Hampson of Buenos Aires as Lady Teazle, in pink and diamonds with powder and patches, whilst Mr. Jack Hampson came as Sir Peter Teazle in appropriate costume, making a well watched and noticeable couple. Mrs. Handcock of Montevideo as the Vicar of Wakefield, Miss Dickinson (Rosario) appeared in black with hair powdered and surmounted by a diamond tiara. Mrs. Wyard of San Paulo made a charming "Runaway Girl" and was universally admired. Sefiorita Medinos of Rio in blue and silver was very good as a Spanish Dancer, and is to be congratulated on her dress. Mrs. Agnew of Natal made a quaint and pretty Dolly Varden, whilst Miss Baker represented poppies in white and red. Miss Strachan (Rio) was to be seen as a Greek slave, and Mrs. Johnston is to be congratulated on her dress as a Japanese with Mr. Johnston hardly to be distinguished from the Ship's Butcher. Mrs. Schumann (Rio) looked well as antique Roccoco, also Miss Hunter (Rio) as Queen of Beasts and Miss Bishop as Pink Domino concludes the list of ladies. For the gentlemen Mr. Dalton and Mr. Bury of B. Aires made pretty, but muscular Heavenly Twins, and throughout the evening were inseparable. Sir Vincent Barrington came as a cook with the "cordon bleu." Mr. Campbell (B. A.) was noticeable in his Highland kit with tartan of that ilk, whilst Mr. Bob Hampson appeared in his wig and gown as a barrister. Mr. Davis of Rio made a good knight of living chess, and Mr. Dennis (senior) of Rio was well and cleverly dressed as a Darvish. Mr. Daniel (Pernambuco) was exceedingly good as black and white, and Señor Medeiros caused much merriment as a Japanese. Mr. Soley as domino and Mr. Dennis as Punchinello were good and the usual ship's officers were represented by Captain Alex. Leal (Captain) Mr. Agnew (of Natal), Mr. Santos (Rio) and Mr. Mannery as Boatswain. Captain Powles as M. C. conducted the whole affair with verve and spirit, and a light supper, during which Her Majesty's health was drunk with Highland honours, concluded a most enjoyable evening.—B.A. Standard.

New Steamer.

On August 30 Sir Rayllon Dixon and Co. (Limited) launched from their Cleveland Dockyards, Mid-diesbrough, a screw steamer 320 feet by 44 feet by 26 feet, built to the order of Messrs. Gellatly, Hankey and Co., of London, and intended for the River Plate trade. The vessel is of the spar deck type, with poop, bridge and forecastle, classed 100 A. 1 at Lloyd's, and has a deadweight capacity of about 4,850 tons on a light draught of water. The accommodation for captain, officers, and engineers is in houses on bridge deck, and crew in topgallant forecastle. The engines by Messrs T. Richardson and Sons (Limited), Hartlepool, are of the triple expansion type, having cylinders 28 inches, 36 inches, 59 inches by 42 inch stroke, and supplied with steam by two large single-ended boiler working at 180 lb. pressure, and fitted with Howden's system of forced draught. On leaving the ways she was named Orono by Mrs. Kennedy, of Saltburn.

A REMEDY FOR BIG BUDGETS.

(Financial News.)
It may seem ungracious to look askance at the aspirations of a humanitarian Czar; but we cannot get up much enthusiasm over the Russian Emperor's call to disarm. Our view is that of the witty Frenchman who, when asked to favour the abolition of capital punishment, suggested that Messieurs les Assassins should begin. When Russia shows a serious determination to settle down to a quiet and peaceable life it will be time to ask those who may have to sup with the Devil to lay aside their long and costly spoons. Great Britain has nothing to lose but all to gain were Europe to disband the huge armies which are at once the only menace to and the only guarantee of peace. Russia, like many another nation, finds the expense of preparing for war too great to be borne, and fears what might be the consequences if a general conflict took place. That fear is a useful and salutary check on ambitious potentates and ruthless chancellors. That disarmament would be equally potent as a protector of the public peace is not altogether certain. The latest war was one in which a standing army entered the lists with a much lighter heart than any European Power would take up the sword. We are suspicious of a craving for disarmament which arises out of a desire to save money, and not out of a single minded wish to substitute a régime of justice and unselfishness in international dealings for one in which might regulates right. A crusade for the abolition of war should proceed from more ideal motives than that of making ends meet. We cannot gush over a message of peace which is only an appeal to relieve the Budgets of countries which have tried the other alternative until they found it did not pay.

A deep-rooted and sincere desire for peace is universal in this country, though the situation and circumstances of our empire compel us to be perennially at war with the forces of barbarism in some quarter or another. Great Britain cannot disarm. Though India is held by the divine right of good government, we must maintain an army there and, to feed and relieve it, an army at home also. Possibly the Czar may have taken this and other kindred considerations into account, and the St. Petersburg conference may admit the propriety of our retaining a standing army to police our vast possessions, which is a very different thing from keeping nations under arms on the continental principle. Proposals for universal arbitration have always broken down, because each several nation has thought that the system would be an admirable one for its neighbours but of doubtful advantage to itself. One cannot help observing that the proposal has come after Russia has comfortably settled herself in China, and also after the military and naval successes of Japan and the United States have proved that the will and the capacity to fight are not monopolies of Europe. By all means let the conference be held, and let us discover whether really practical suggestions lie behind the Czar's invitation—suggestions which take cognisance of the peculiar conditions affecting an empire with neighbours who could not understand disarmament, and would not practise it if they could. As the proposition is not inspired by more disinterested motives than anxiety to reduce the strain on continental revenues, we need not be ashamed to discuss it, on our part, from purely selfish and utilitarian points of view. There is no disputing the tremendous financial relief disarmament would afford to the Great Powers, and could it be guaranteed that the wealth thus liberated would be turned into beneficial channels the speed of the world on its way to the millennium would be enormously accelerated. But there to only too much reason to fear that universal disarmament, like «the parliament of man, the federation of the world,» will remain a poetic vision, unrealisable in our time.

SUNDRIES.

—The production of Ibsen's now famous play «The Doll's House» drew a crowded and curious audience to the Solis Theatre on Tuesday evening, but it would be difficult to say that all the spectators came away entirely pleased or satisfied. The play is one of those which it is difficult to appreciate at a first hearing, and still more so when the language is not entirely familiar. It deals with ideas and phases of thought more than with action, presenting problems which the spectator does not always readily catch at first sight, and which the author himself sometimes neither presents very clearly nor attempts to solve. It is suggestive, rather than presentative, and thus appears strange and even indeterminate to audiences accustomed to more straightforward and clearer dramatic fare. That it has power of a certain class and considerable study of human character, cannot be denied, but we doubt whether this class of play will ever become very popular or disestablish the older form of drama. The view Ibsen takes of life and human nature is essentially pessimistic, and the influence of his play is depressing, not stimulating either mentally or morally. He is certainly a very long way from being a second Shakespeare or even a Moliere, and we are not surprised that Nordau should have classed him among the «degenerates» of the period. The interpretation was good as regards the Sr. Mariani, and indifferent as regards the rest of the Company, who have not yet learnt to subdue themselves to the sombre coloring and half-tones of the Norwegian dramatist, which are strongly in contrast with the class of plays they usually present. This evening will be given the comedy from the French «Il Bircichino de Parigi» which is much brighter fare.

—The death took place yesterday, after a protracted and painful illness, the result of a wound received in the battle of Tres Arboles in the revolution last year, of Lieut. Col. Octavio Perez, who was at the time 2nd Chief of the 2nd Chasseurs (Col. Flores' regiment). The deceased officer, who was only 38 years of age, is much lamented in military circles. He will be buried to day, with the corresponding military honors.

—Neither Chile nor Argentina, says the B. A. Standard, seems much disposed to disarm. In fact the telegrams from the other side of the Ridge distinctly say that the Government will not consent to disarm. Here the greatest activity continues to prevail in military circles. The works of the military port are being pushed forward with rapidity. Yesterday the enormous Krupp pieces (24 cent.) were safely conveyed to the sites where they are to be mounted. Only two days ago, these magnificent pieces of ordnance were lying in waggon at some station near Bahia Blanca, while the rails were being laid to the batteries. A bridge moreover, had to be thrown across an «arroyo». All this has been done in a few hours. The guns will soon be up now.

—«What is a philosopher?» asked the teacher of a class of little girls. «Oh, please, I know,» cried Dolly eagerly. «It's a man what rides a hippopotamus.»
—A little girl from town was staying with some cousins at a farm-house, and was mortified to find herself ignorant of many things concerning farm life which were familiar to her country cousins. But at breakfast there was honey on the table, and she thought herself on sure ground as she remarked: «Ah, I see you keep a bee.»
—The P. S. N. Co's «Liguria», bringing London dates to about the 10th instant, is expected tomorrow afternoon or early on Saturday morning, sailing on Saturday for the West Coast.

—Snakes are one of the scourges of India. Thousands of people die yearly from their bite. In the last twenty two years the number of deaths attributed to this cause has reached the enormous total of 433,289. Snakes appear to be a much more deadly enemy of man than wild animals. In the same period wild animals have only killed 64,284 persons. On an average in India 20,000 people perish yearly by snakes and wild animals.

On Tuesday night a soldier named Bernabé Barrios committed suicide in the National Arsenal, where he was one of the guard, shooting himself through the head with his rifle.

At the San Felipe this evening will be presented 'Ensalada Criolla,' which seems to have taken a permanent place in the programme, and the drama 'Los Guachitos.'

The next race meeting at Maroñas will be one of five events, including the Gran Premio Nacional, on Sunday, October 1. Entries close on Saturday next.

General Gregorio Castro, recently Minister of War, is reported to be seriously ill at his estancia at Belén. General L. E. Pérez is still in a very delicate state.

There is certainly something very serious going on in China, but it would be rash to say precisely what, as the telegrams, after their usual sweet fashion, contradict each other daily.

The marriage of Mr. G. Anderson and Miss Hooper was celebrated at Holy Trinity Church yesterday afternoon, and was a quiet but pretty wedding. The bride looked remarkably pretty in the traditional white and orange blossoms.

The telegrams continue to indulge in the wildest contradictions over the situation in Fashoda, and it is impossible to derive anything certain from them.

Mr. J. O'Grady, President of the Trade Union Congress now sitting at Bristol, in the course of his address yesterday advocated the federation of Trade Unions and their organization for political action so that Parliament might be enabled to register the social changes in the condition of the people.

Sir Edward Russell, in the course of his presidential address at the Annual Conference of the Institute of Journalists at Nottingham yesterday, spoke of the rights and duties of journalists, and in regard to the law of libel said it was in the power of the Legislature and the jurybox to make the Press miserably timid or wholesomely bold.

Very dismal weather was experienced at Plymouth yesterday, but at noon it cleared sufficiently to enable the Prince of Wales, to quit the Royal yacht Osborne and pay a final visit to the Earl of Mount-Edgumbe, with whom he went for a long drive. On his return the Osborne started on her voyage to Dartmouth, Torbay, and Cowes.

Joseph Lewis, who murdered Robert Scott, a gamekeeper, at Margam, in June last, was hanged at Swansea Gaol yesterday.

Kent playing Middlesex at Catford resumed batting yesterday, and went out for 109, an exactly similar total being made by their opponents in their second innings. In their second attempt Kent put up 86 for the loss of five wickets.

An action for 10l. damages, brought against the Rev. C. G. Gull, headmaster of the Grocers' Company's School at Hackney Downs, for, as it was alleged, unjustifiably flogging a pupil named Henry Sheldon, resulted in the Whitechapel County Court yesterday in a judgment for one shilling, without costs.

Shocking brutality by a drunken mother to her twelve-year-old daughter was disclosed at the Marylebone Police-court yesterday. It was shown that Margaret Roots, living at Euston-street, stripped her child naked and beat her with a cane until she was black and blue.

MISS VANDYKE.

(A SHORT STORY)

All through the winter she wore the same grey garb, which became almost threadbare. In the cold weather it seemed to me that she was not sufficiently clad.

"Our cold," she said, with a shiver, "is more intense, but less scorching, less chill. I must economize to the utmost if ever I am to get to Italy. What will food and clothes matter to me for the rest of my life compared to that? But money melts so here, that I often tremble in case I should never get there, after all."

She had at first initiated me into the simple mysteries of her economy, and we had lunched together at restaurants of marvellous cheapness; but, during the winter Miss Vandyke frequented restaurants with me no more; she did not wish me to guess the length to which she carried her economies.

She began to look much older. The hard, continuous effort told upon her; her hair whitened, her wrinkles deepened, but her spirit lost none of its sweet brightness, and I consoled myself with the hope that she would be repaid in the end by the attainment of her object.

"These pictures I am copying are for a cousin in New York," she told me one day. "She asked me to do some copies, and offered to send me a draft on her banker here; but, of course, I refused. How could I tell if she would like them when they were done? But she just took no notice, and sent me the money, so I must do the best I can."

Well, winter passed; time flashed, as it were, and was gone. Spring came. Miss Vandyke toiled on and said little, but I could see that she longed for Italy with a sort of ideal nostalgia.

Paris is lovely at all times, but in spring it is enchanting. Everywhere there is sunshine, verdure, and a spirit of good-humour in the air. The oaks and birches with innumerable spires of blossom; drifts of ethereal verdure spread over the heath; blackbirds and thrushes sing as though they were far away in some still, solitary, primrose-sprinkled wood.

One day I met Miss Vandyke. She came up to me looking quite excited.

"Oh, my dear child," she exclaimed, "I have such a bright idea! I wonder that it did not occur to me before. Of course, you will go to Italy with me. How lovely that will be! You can't? Well, if you can't you can't; but I have a presentiment that you will. You see, it's such an opportunity for you. I'll chaperone you, and we'll do it cheaply as it can be done. Do try; there no saying what you can do if you only try."

That evening, as I went home, a magnificent sunset was flashing all the sky with brilliant colour. Across the orange and blood-red glow at the horizon—over the Bois de Boulogne—lay deep circles of purple, fringed with fire, and over the pale primrose and clear green spaces flittered a multitude of crimson cloudlets fretted with gold. The vivid verdure down the long avenues shone in the last golden light with a strange brilliance.

"Why should I want to go to Italy," I thought, "when Nature spreads for me such marvellous pageant of cloud and colour—such ineffable tenderness in the unfolding of the spring—wherever we may be?"

And yet I did feel a little unsettled by that suggestion of Miss Vandyke's.

Within, tea was waiting for me on a little table beside the hearth on which glowed a great log; blue and yellow flames curled round it, and the flickering lights illuminated on the china and silver beside which lay my letters.

Now, what follows was a curious coincidence, but a fact. The first letter I opened informed me that a kind old lady had died and left me some money; not a colossal fortune, but a useful sum. This reminded me, somewhat late, of the fact of her existence, of which I had been oblivious for fifteen long years. It was a nice, kindly way of beeping coals of fire on my head, and I felt quite sorry and remorseful in a mild way. The letter went on to suggest that I should go to Italy with the little American lady you like so much; and further stated that it was the unanimous opinion of my family that I should be very foolish to lose so good an opportunity.

"Of course you must go," said my friends when they heard of it, but I felt very doubtful about it.

"Well," said Miss Vandyke, as I stood by her easel next day, "what has happened to you, child? I know you're going to Italy with me. Now, I know it. Dida's I say I had a presentiment? You don't think you'll go? Oh, you poor misguided child, of course you'll go. It's your duty, when your people say so. Your conscience! Fiddlesticks! I know what it is. You are young and romantic. Girls are always longing to make a sacrifice—one that will be heroic—something that will show. I used to be as a girl. I longed for the house to get on fire that I might rush in at the risk of my life and save somebody. I was always hoping for an opportunity to plunge into the river to rescue the drowning. But, my dear, believe me, it isn't practical, it isn't common sense. The thing to do is to learn quietly to control one's nerves, to learn, in the first place, to swim. Yours is a narrow point of view. It may seem to you selfish to go to Italy, but it is not so in the long run. You will not go so much for pleasure as for education. Now what are you put in this world for but to be useful and influence others for good? The less you take in, the poorer are to give out. If you got to Italy your mind will be the richer for life; stay away—vice versa. What is money compared to influence? Why, I'm living on my own capital now! My dear mother need say—she was a wise woman—'My dear, I don't care how much I spend on your education'—she had not much to spend—'for it will enrich your mind, make you of value to the world, and fit you to endure loneliness.' And that," said Miss Vandyke, with a pathos of which she was unconscious, "I have had to endure."
