THE SWEATING SYSTEM.

On resuming, on Friday June 15, Lord Dunraven's committee of the House of Lords took the evidence of Mr. Peter Van Damme, of Charles-street, Fitzroy-square. He proceeded to make grave charges against Messrs. Maple. He said: In 1883 I contracted verbally to deliver 12 chairs to Maple at 2s. 6s. per chair. When I took them in Maple said he did not know me. Then I took the chairs away again, and he sent a boy after me and offered me 1s. 6s. for each chair. I told him I could not give the chairs at that price. Witness then gave four other cases in which much the same thing has been done to him at Maple's.

Mr. Dickson, another master cabinet-maker, said that 13 years ago he took an order for 420x worth of goods from Messrs. Maple, and the goods were thrown on his hands. Their sole reason for throwing them on his hands was that he refused when the goods were made to take 2s. 3s. 6d. off the agreed price.

Henry Wallham said he was secretary of the London Upholsterers' society, and secretary of the Upholsterers' Club. All the sweating in their business they traced to Maple and Co., which was demolishing to the workmen and dangerous to the State. In his official capacity he had known Maple's as a sweating firm ever since 1878.

Thomas Brown, an upholsterer, employed by Howard's, of Berners-street, said that about seven years ago he was working for Maple's as a journeyman upholsterer, as a piece worker on their own premises. He complained that the prices were lowered without notice. This was continually going on, and being hard up he was obliged to submit. At last he complained of a deduction of 5s. in a dining-room suite, and instead of getting his money he was discharged. He summoned them for the 5s., and it was paid into court. Speaking of the number of men coming up from the country, the witness said: There have not been so many of late years I dare say, because the terror of the name of Maple had got abroad. Some of them might still come up in the hope that if every other shop was closed they might go to the "work-house," which, of course, is the non de plume of Maple in the trade.

Thomas Shaughey, a journeyman upholsterer for the last 13 years, who had worked for Maple, said that he had known men who got nothing whatever for their work, because it was sent back by the customer owing to the badness of the material. This, however, was no fault whatever of the workman, and he should have been paid for his labour.

On Tuesday Mr. Arnold White made a statement in reference to sweating in army accoutrement work for the Government, which he endeavoured to show was brought about by the three elements of sub-contracting, long hours, and low wages, while there was no reason to suppose that the taxpayer pay less for the article. The fact was that before the payment for the article reached the working man, a considerable proportion of it was annexed by the middleman. The trade was a limited one. Formerly, when the clothing was under the control of the colonel of the regiment the practice was to give the accoutrement work to regular army contractors, who supplied the leather and gave out the sewing to persons whom they knew. Good prices were then paid. The system of sweating arose under Government contracts, and one of the earliest sweaters was once a potman and another a draper's assistant, and consequently, could not be practical men. These sweaters were consequently prepared to take work at lower prices than others, and one of them, the man who was the potman, was still contracting. The average price paid by the sweaters was less than 3d. per hour, and the workers had to supply their own thread, wax, and grease; and this was itself an evil, because the men admitted that as the articles were loosely supervised at the depots some of the work contracted for was done with three-fold thread instead of five-fold thread.

Evidence was then given by several harness-makers, who, owing to death of employment, had had to work on military accoutrements for sweaters. They agreed in the prices quoted by Mr. White, and admitted that in order to eke out their earnings they had only put in three-fold thread and a lesser number of stitches to the inch than the particular work required. They also said that very little of this defective work was detected under the Government inspection, although they admitted that in some cases it might be difficult to discover the flaw. Some complained that a commission was charged on slight money advances obtained from the sweaters in order to buy thread, &c.

Their lordships adjourned until Friday.

DEATHS.

Colonel King-Harman, M.P., Under-Secretary for Ireland, died on Sunday June 10 at his residence, Rockingham, Boyle, county Roscommon, after an intermittent illness of several months, during which he stuck to his post until he was ordered peremptorily to take rest and change. He suffered greatly from stricture of the esophagus, which led to his death. Born in 1838, he was the eldest son of the late Hon. Lawrence King-Harman, who was son of Viscount Lorton, and brother of the sixth Earl of Kingston; his mother being Mary Cecilia, daughter of Mr. James Raymond Johnstone, of Alva, Stirlingshire. The late Colonel was a magistrate for the counties Longford, Sligo, and Westmeath, where his property is situated, and he was Lieutenant and Custos Rotundorum of the county Roscommon. Mr. A. J. Balfour received a letter—signed by Colonel King-Harman on the morning after his death, announcing his resignation of the office of Irish Under-Secretary.

The widow of Michael Balfe one of the most genial of British composers, died on the 8th June at the advanced age of 80. Madame Balfe survived all her children, but leaves a grandson, Mr. Ireland, worthily to represent the musical talent of the family.

State has done in this matter would be scouted from society. The main object of Saturday's application was to try and discover, by making the case public, the whereabouts of a gentleman who had professed assistance at the last hearing. As showing his personal sympathy, Mr. Briggs handed Mrs. Wilson half-a-sovereign out of his own purse. If my lord's are capable of blushing, they should do so now.
