MONTEVIDEO, AUGUST 3, 1888.

LOCAL JOURNALISM.

Another season of dulness has fallen on the papers here. Congress is not sitting, Patti has ceased singing, Santos is in Europe. Consequently our native contemporaries have to fall back, for the most part, on the old resource of piling into each other. This they do with a heartiness and a gusto that would almost make one believe the idea was a new and original one. Instead of being an expedient of topless journalism ever since the institution of the press, Running through the morning papers, (Thursday) what do we find? La Nación combating attacks of El Lien, and indulging in sneers and sarcasms at other papers belonging to different parties to itself. El Centor, for the fiftieth time making a personal attack on El Siglo, La Tribuna, President Tajes, and others. La Unión Gallega, attacks El Centor. La Crónica attacks an article of La Tribuna. El Lien indulges in a savage onslaught on L'Italia concerning Giordano Bruno. El Siglo, for a wonder, forgets to attack El Centor and gives an article on the Paris Exhibition. El Imparcial deals with the Municipal Loan, La Razón with the Budget. The few other papers we have seen have no leading article at all. This programme may be taken as an average one, illustrative of the general spirit of the local press.

Yet, if these papers were to leave mutual attack and personalities alone, there are plenty of topics with which they could occupy themselves, and by so doing, not only be of direct public benefit, but raise themselves enormously in general opinion as well. For instance, there is much that might be said about the waste of time in Congress, judicial abuses, miscarriages of justice, municipal abuses, police abuses, public morals, the development of the capital and the republic, immigration, the port, maritime affairs, public health, local customs as contrasted with European, education, and fifty other pertinent subjects, all well within the province of a newspaper. Yet these are scarcely ever thought worth the handling, or mentioned, are generally relegated to some small paragraph in the least important section of the paper.

Although there are more than twice as many daily papers published in this little city as in London or New York, there is hardly one that has any fixed programme or is made to serve other than personal interests. Even the partisanship which they so warmly indulge in is not that of any party working combinedly for a clearly defined principle, so much as the support of this or that personal claimant to office or power. A. B. or C. D. is supported, not because of his opinions or aims, or of any benefit he is likely to work to the country or to the office to which he pretends, but merely because he is A. B. or C. D. and not W. X. or Y. Z.

As to the other parts of the papers, they are filled up with a certain amount of business and general news, neither particularly complete nor trustworthy, and for the rest, with a page or two from a novel, and cuttings from European papers, taken almost at random and without any serious idea whatever beyond that of filling up so many vacant columns. Occasionally we find a piece of original matter, but even then it is generally some trifling piece of fiction, written in the most unscrupulous of styles, and not always free from the charge of salaciousness.

To give an example of the latter. We reprinted a few days ago a short article written by an accredited member of the staff of one of the first papers in the world, and recording, in a serious and observant manner, first impressions of Buenos Aires. How did we find it answered? By earnest argument or incontrovertible proof? No, far from it. Only one paper—El Lien—thought it worth while replying to, and that reply merely consisted of a number of petty and silly impertinences, on a level with those of a vulgar street arab who, cuffed a caper and puts his fingers to his nose behind a policeman's back.

We do not wish to pursue this affair too far, lest we should give too deep offence to some of our contemporaries, which we have little wish to do. Moreover, we believe the fault lies not so much with the journalists, many of whom are men of proven literary merit and high aims, as with the system on which the newspapers are established.

It must be remembered that there are in this town some 23 or 24 morning papers, whilst London and New York only number some 8 or 10 each. Yet the whole circulation of these 23 or 24 papers does not amount to 20,000 copies, whilst the circulation of one London or New York daily varies from 150,000 to 600,000. Making all allowances for differences of size, staff, matter, and so forth, it soon becomes evident that scarcely one of the papers here can be self-supporting, but must depend for its existence on some extraneous aid. And this is generally known to be the case. Nearly every paper is started and maintained, not as a paying business or to meet some evident want, but for the support of this or that statesman or this or that party. To this end all other things are sacrificed, and every subject that does not bear directly on this narrow and generally personal policy is, as often as not, left to take care of itself. In this there may be found, to our thinking, much explanation of the very unscrupulous tone of journalism of which we complain. Other causes there are, one of which, is that want of "ballast" which is such a national defect in the River Plate, but with these we have no time to deal at present.

THE SUICIDE'S BRIDGE.

Clifton Suspension Bridge, owing to its fatal attraction for suicides, is the theme of frequent local discussion; and it is now again under consideration whether the periodical fatal leaps from the bridge cannot be prevented. There is no lack of suggestion from engineers, but various circumstances conspire to delay a decision. The beauty of the bridge is a consideration. It is hard that foolish suicides should force the directors to mar that; and then even if some ornamental obstruction to suicide were erected there is the question of the weight added to the bridge. For a long time it was contended that no protection was necessary; but this seems to have been based upon a coroner's opinion that the bridge did not add to the number of suicides, and that persons determined to commit suicide would do so even if there were no bridge. There is something said against the coroner's view. There is, for example, the story of a man who had to beg some people to see him safely across the bridge, as its height had a fatal fascination for him, and he felt it difficult to resist the impulse to throw himself over.

After such an experience who could say how oft the sight of the means to do the ill deed might not make the ill deed done. The marvellous experience of the young woman who flung herself from the bridge's dizzy height in 1886 is still recalled with amazement; how she escaped with both life and limb, and only needed a brief rest in the Bristol Infirmary to recover from shock. It is almost as great a descent as hers to come down from such a romantic record to prosaic details now suggested for the hindrance of suicides. Those include a catch-net below the bridge, an awning above the parapet, an upright wire netting, bent spikes on the balustrade, a loose wire with barbed spikes stretched between iron uprights a foot above the parapet, and the simple process of spiking the chains. These spiky suggestions are all based upon the idea prosaically expressed by one engineer, who expects suicides would strongly object to spiking themselves before death, or even hurting themselves in any way. A would-be suicide once occasioned a friend great anxiety by his efforts to throw himself over one of the Thames bridges. Wary at length of dissuasion, his friend impatiently exclaimed:—"Well, good night; you will find the water very cold." This suggestion effectually sobered him.

THE RUSSIAN ROUBLE

The value of the Russian rouble is probably as substantial a sign of the political position in the East of Europe as any numerical index could well be. The exchange value of the rouble condenses in itself whole rows of arguments and sentiments as to the attitude of Russia towards the outer world. These arguments are not wholly political, however, and the very recent rise in the value of the rouble, from 19 1/2d. to 22 1/2d., a rise of 15 per cent., is, to a large extent, the result of a demand in Germany, Holland, and elsewhere for Russian notes as a means of paying for corn exported from Russia, these exports having been considerable of late. Moreover a large harvest seems to be in view this year in the majority of the Russian provinces, and there will be all the more money to be paid to Russia, so that the rise is partly in anticipation of a growing demand for Russian paper money. Until very recently there has been a tendency to let the value of Russian currency slide down. Since it was known, however, that the new German Emperor has resolved upon a meeting with the Czar as testimony of the continuance of friendly relations between the two Empires, the rouble has risen in market estimation in Berlin, Amsterdam, and London alike. As there are numbers of business men who conduct their affairs according to figures like this rather than fine-spun arguments, the rise in the rouble is of all the more importance for international trade.

OPIMUM.

Indian opium, which the Chinese in other days fought so hard to keep out of their country, is now reported to have become a very small and still diminishing article of import at the Chinese ports; but unhappily this is only because the Chinese have taken to growing this pernicious drug themselves. Mr. Holland states that the cultivation of the native opium appears to be a profitable labour among the poorer classes, and pays as well as millet, their chief staple of food, or any other grain; especially as cabbages can be grown on the same ground after the poppy. The native drug is said to be largely adulterated by boiling with it such things as pig's fat and strips of fresh pig's skin, a certain kind of young wood, &c. It was the extra tax of 80 taels per chest on foreign opium that gave to the native drug such an impetus. Mr. Holland thinks it may safely be prophesied that not only will the foreign drug cease ere long to figure as an import, but the native drug will soon appear as an export.

EXPRESSIONS

—One especial exception must be made to the general strictures passed on the local press in our leading article of today. La Tribuna Popular not only gives by far the most complete and reliable amount of local news of any paper here, but frequently publishes articles involving much serious study and labour, such as those now being issued on Industrial Establishments of the Republic, by Dr. Wünnier.

—As if in direct corroboration of our article of yesterday on River Plate Police Abuses, we find the following in the Buenos Aires Herald of the same date:—"Whatever can the Press of this Republic be doing that it keeps silence while the most horrible barbarities are being committed in the name of justice? All over this Republic are men languishing in prison month after month and year after year without trial, immured in living tombs, by no sentence of law. Our colleagues of the Press, which have columns and pages for gushing generalities over Brazilian emancipation have no time, no space and no attention for the prisoner kept in violation of law or of humanity in prison, unfriended and unsentenced. The fact is disgraceful. We have a Minister of Justice, and does not this Minister know, what all the world knows, that our prisons are crowded with friendless prisoners who are kept in prison year after year without trial? Can this Minister reconcile these facts with his idea of his duty as Minister of Justice?"

—If ever there was a case for capital punishment, it is that of the assassin at Olavarría, of whose crime we give the chief details to-day, and whose crime is as infamous as any ever committed. We shall be curious to see how long the Argentine authorities will keep this wretch without a trial, and what punishment is awarded him in the end. It will be an everlasting scandal if he is let off with a few years imprisonment, as too many murderers are. As the Herald justly observes, it is a clear case for Judge Lynch, and it is a pity the Judge was not on the spot.

—The papers give an account of the shocking result of a foolish practical joke played at Buenos Aires. Some brainless girl, thinking to startle a neighbour just in the first joys of motherhood, stole her baby from its cradle, replacing it with a bundle of clothes. The shock the mother experienced on discovering the loss has overbalanced her reason.
