Sir William Harcourt, addressing his constituents at Derby last night, compared the Liberal policy with the Conservative for the past thirty years, and conalways succeeded eventually. He described the Tory party as a «tobogganing party, and said they were on the top of the slide to Home Rule. The policy pursued towards Ireland hand been an erroneous one. Englishmen were becoming ashamed of it, and desired that Irishmen should be treated as fairly as Englishmen. He charged the Tories with vacillation, with trying to combine with Irish Nationalists to obtain office, and then making an alliance with the Dissentient Liberals. He condemned the imprisonment of Mr. Blunt and the Irish leaders. These matters would have to Government on every platform in the country, and he was confident that their appeal would be the triumphant issue of

SAYINGS WORTH REMEMBERING

Agassiz's intense enthusiasm in his favou rite study of natural history is well known and its permanent fruits are now seen in the peaves many questions still doubtful. the finest in the world. But it is not so well known that he pursued this study with a de liberate sacrifice of personal advantage, and of the oportunity of wealth. He was a popuar lecturer, and could have made his own terms with lyceums eager to hear him. But his reply to such overtures is one of the nomoney." A reply equally not eworthy was made by Albert Gallatin, one of the great statesmen and financiers of the post-revolutionary period. He was a successor to Hamilton as the secretary of the treasury, and managed the national finances with equal ability and success. But his manner of living was a model of republican simplicity, and he died poor, though millions passed through ring, admired his character, and was trou bled that so noble a man should be hampe > of life. Mr. Gallatin firmly declined it saying, with emphasis: The man who has the direction of the finances of a country should never die rich."

THE DOG AND THE RAILWAY TRAIN.

red by inadequate means of living. He offer ed Mr. Gallatin a handsome fortune, which would have made him comfortable to the end

The following story is told of the South Eastern Railway, A man was travelling by would take care of him in the van. To this the owner of the dog refused to agree; and after a lengthy argument exclaimed:

-If you can't let the poor beast travel quietly here under the seat, he shall cerainly not be fastened up in the van. but shall have a little fresh air and exercise." He accordingly hitched a piece of string round the dog's collar, and, to the intense astonishment of the officials, attached him to the coupling chains of the last vehicle "Simple murder!" said the guard.

"Not a bit of it," answered the passenger. If my dog could not keep up with the trains on this line, I'd sell him to the first fat old lady I met."

The goard felt that the credit of his line was at stake, so he went to the driver and stoker, told them of the occurrence, and begged that they would get as much pacout of the old wheezy engine as possible.

A start was made immediately afterwards and the guard went to his van to enjoy the out. So matters continued as far as the first and heaped abuse on the stoker, who said

The run to the next station is down a so mewhat steep gradient, and by dint of excessive firing and skilful manipulation, the rew of hearses got up quite a festive pace. "Oh," said our friend in the van, "this is something like. I wonder how much is left of that brute behind?" To his joy, when he looked out, he could see nothing but the string hanging loosely from the chains. 'Poor beast! It was cruel after all!" murmured he, as he drew his telligent and faithful animal sitting on the platform waiting for his master to come in by the train.

WISE AND OTHERWISE

-My dear old friend, how were you able o acquire such an immense fortune?" By a very simple method." -What method is that?" -When I was poor I made out that I was rich, and when I got rich I made out that I was poer." A commercial traveller was bragging about the magnitude of the firm he repre "I suppose your house is a pretty big etablishment," said the customer.

Big? You can't have any idea of its dinensions. Last week we took an inventory of the employes, and found out for the first time that three cashiers and four bookkeepers were missing. That will give you som idea of the magnitude of our business." -- A man who has figured it out states that

He may be correct in his calculation, but it would be extremely dificult to assemble so many people together for the purpose of making the test. People who clasp hands have a way of flocking off by themselves in couples, holding that thirty-two million is no company.
