THE ROYAL INSTITUTION Poisons and Poisoning, was the subject of a Discourse a short time ago at the Royal Institution. The lecturer, Professor Meymott Tidy, began by directing attention to the derivation of the word stoxicology, the science of poisons. By giving an enlarged sense to the Greek words from which it is primarily derived-for words ever strive to keep pace, if possible, with scientific progress - we get our modern and significant expression toxicology as the science of polsons and of poisoning. A certain grim historical interest gathers around the story of poisons. It is a history worth studying, for poisons have played their part in history. The «subtil serpent» taught men the power of a poisoned fang. Poison was in the first instance a simple instrument of open warfare. Thus, our savage ancestors tipped their arrows with the snake poison in order to render them more deadly. The use of vegetable extracts for this purpose belongs to a later period. The suggestion is not unreasonable that if war chemists with their makes a noise like the report of a later period. The suggestion is not unreasonable that if war chemists with their makes a noise like the report of a later period. powders, their guncotton, and their exscience was rocked in the laboratory of the toxicological worker. Early in the As late as the middle of the last century Blumenbach persuaded one of his class to drink 70z. of warm bullock's blood in order to disprove the then popular notion popular definition of a poison is «a drug which destroys life rapidly when taken in small quantity.. The terms «small quantity » as regards amount, and «rapidly » as regards time, are as indefinite as Hodge's «piece of chalk» as regards size. The professor defined a poison as any substance which otherwise than by the agency of heat or electricity is capable of destroying life either by chemical action on the tissues of the living body or by physiological action by absorption into the living system. This definition excepted from the list of poisons all agencies that destroyed life by a simple mechanical action, thus drawing a distinction between a *poison * and a "destructive thing." It emains why nitrogen is not a poison and why earbonic acid is, although neither can support life. This point the lecturer illustrated. A poison must be capable of destroying life. It was nonsense to talk 4 201. of a "deadly poison." If a body he a poison it is deadly; if it be not deadly it is not a poison. Three illustrations of the chemical actions of poisons were selected. The first was sulphuric acid. Here the molecular death of the part to which the acid was applied was due to the tendency of sulphuric acid, to come the tendency of sulphuric acid. the tendency of sulphurie acid to combine with water. The stomach became charred. The molecular death of certain tissues destroyed the general functional rhythmicity of the system until the disturbanco became general, somatic death (that is, the death of the entire body) resulting. The second illustration was poisoning by carbonic oxide. The professor gave an illustrated description of the blood known as hamoglobin, drawing attention to its remarkable formation by a higher synthetical act from the albumenoids in the animal body, and to the circumstance that, contrary to general cule, both its oxidation and reduction may be easily effected. It was explained that on this rhythmic action of oxidizing Por primera vez en Montevideoand reducing hamoglobin life depended. tively stable compound; at any rate, a compound so stable that it ceased to be the efficient oxygen-carrier of normal hamojlobin. This interference with the ordinary action of hamoglobin constituted poisoning by carbonic oxide. In connexion with this subject the lecturer referred to the use of the spectroscope as an analytical agent, and showed the audience the spectrum of blood extractaudience the spectrum of blood extracted Ballo CollSIPHCTOL (for the murder of whom Müller was executed), and this was the first case in which the spectroscopic appearances of blood formed the subject matter of ovidence. The third illustration of poisoning was poisoning by strychnine. Here again the power of the drug for undergoing oxidation was illustrated. It was noted that although our knowledge of the precise modusoperandi of the poison was imperfect, nevertheless that poison was imperfect, nevertheless that the coincidence of the first fit in the animal after its exhibition with the formation of reduced harmoglobin in the body was important. There followed tienen valiosos cercos de material, verjas upon this view of the chemical action of poison in the living body this question:

The researches of Blake, Rabuteau, Richet, Bouchardat, Fraser, and Crum-Brown were discussed, the results of their observations being that at present we were unable to determine toxicity or physiological action by any general physiological action and acabado; es la edificación más sorprendente; y para que nado falte alli, los senores Cayol y Ca, de Buenos Aires, han solicitado la concesión de un trenvia (estilo nuevo) de pasageros y carga, que, certamble por varias calles de la ciudad, pase tambien por aquella feliz localidad, centro de la actividad que es caractegrantes. gical action by any general chemical or

Why should piperine be the polson of all polsons to keep you awake, and morphine the polson of all polsons to send you asleep, although to have been the polson of all comienzo a la una en punto y terminaran polsons to send you asleep, although to the chemist these two bodies were of identical composition? The lecturer urged that the science of medicine (for the poisons of the toxicologist were the medicines of the physician) must be experimental. Guard jealously against all wanton cruelty to animals; but to deprive the higher creation of life and health lest one of the lower creatures should suffer was the very refinement of cruelty. «Are ye not of much more value than they?» ye not of much more value than thev? >
