MONTEVIDEO, NOVEMBER 18, 1838.

EXPRESSIONS Aires are still growing, and it is rumoured that the movement will extend to this doubt its truth. Moreover the reasons we have already adduced for the difficulty of strikes in Buenos Aires, are even more likely to hold good here. Nous of the question, but easily disproved by any one who cares to Judge the matter deal to be said on both sides. impartially.

-The first of these is the fallacy that whilst employers have every right to use all means to obtain the best price for the goods they offer for sale, the employed have no right at all to use any means to obtain the best price for their goods, namely, their labour.

-The second fallacy is, that when a man has received a perhaps not too liberal wage for his day's work, there remains due from him a certain obligation to his employer, whilst on other hand, the employer, having paid the wage and received the work is under no obligation to the employed.

-Although the mere statement of these beliefs in plain straightforward English should be enough to prove their fallacious character, they are still constantly acted on, if not openly avowed. Witness, some of the incidents of the present strikes. -These and many similar difficulties
