Music was to him a mistress in every sense of the word,—a mistress whose commands he obeyed, whose smiles he loved, whose wrongs moved smiles he loved, whose wrongs moved that it might be spared.» The Brazilians advances of this country in the last half century surely none had been greater than that of music. Publications and performances were now so extraordinarily multiplied that the masterpioces not only of old composers, but of the most modern writers, were brought within the means of every one. England had thus so far the chance of again assuming the position that she held many hundred years ago of being at the head of Europe as a musical country. She was him as no others did. Records existed which proved how diligently and enthusizstically music was pursued in Er gland from the reign of King Alfred to the time of the Reformation. It was a satisfaction to know, too, tha in those early days musicians were well paid. The constitution of military bands in England was also of a very early date. which commerce was pursued, and to the extraordinary way in which religious and political struggles, and, later, practical science, had absorbed their energies. We were content to buy our music while we were making churches, steam engines, railways, cotton mills, constitutions, anti-corn law leagues, and caucuses.
