MONTEVIDEO, FEBRUARY 13, 1889.

A SCHOOL FOR NON-COMMISSIONED

OFFICERS.

Under this head I have just read an article in a contemporary, to advocate the institution of a school for the non-commissioned officers of the army of this Republic.

There is already a Military College through which all officers have to pass nios; the native army is about 100,000.

Taking the population at about 40,000 millions this would give a 400th part and besides there is generally some wargling on which absorbs a certain amount of men. Taking these examples, and keeping them before us, I believe the Oriental army consists of 4000 men.

The population is about 600,000 giving the army as the 150th part of the population, therefore the army which is considered necessary here is two and a half times more numerous than is considered necessary for Great Britain and more than thirteen times more than the United States considers sufficient in proportion to the inhabitants. Now supposing all internal dissensions are over, and that there will be no more revolutions, who then wishes to fight the Republic of Uruguay? Has she any foreign enemies therefore I say, what is an army wanted for a militia, yes that is different; make that as efficient and as well appointed as possible, as a defensive army, and for that reason have colleges for your officers and non-commissioned officers, so as always to keep up an efficient staff. But the present little army which looks smart enough, is hardly worth the expense, as man for man it costs as much comparatively as the English Army, and surely one good clean regiment would do all the Guard mounting required, would be a practical school for Officers and non-commissioned officers and to parade on such occasions as when a neighbouring President comes to pay a visit, which in all probability will not be very often.

What would the saving be to the country?

The Army now costs more than three million dollars per annum, save half of this and spend the other half on the militia, and the revenue of the country would at once show a good surplus; instead of a deficit, and more men would be available for other purposes.

YELLOW JACK.

When I was a young fellow, years ago in London, I was in the employ of a large firm of Ship-owners.

My health had broken down owing to hard work, and the Doctor ordered me rest and a long sea voyage. The firm at once gave me the required leave, and shipped me off as sole passenger in one of their best trading clippers.

We had a fine passage, and arrived safely in the magnificent harbour of Rio de Janeiro. We lay for some days; during which the heat was intense; when, all unannounced, there burst over the city and the shipping, one of those terrrible outbreaks of yellow fever that are so common there.

The disease spread with fearful rapidity, and soon our ship was one among the crowd flying the hateful yellow flag.

It was terrible to be day after day on the glassy sea and watch the doomed city through the haze, and the ships nearer at hand. Constantly the yellow flags were fluttering down to half mast, as a signal to take away the bodies for interment. All our crew had deserted at the first with the exception of the Captain, the carpenter a tall thin Scotchman from the Clyde, and a black cook named Jacob. These with myself formed the whole ships company. Suddenly the Captain was struck down, and by influence we managed to get him taken off to one of the hospitals ashore.

Next day, chips, the carpenter, was laid low. Jacob came and told me chips was in his bunk, very bad, so I went and visited him. I found him raving in fever. We flew a signal for the Doctor.

After a while he came off, said it was a bad case, gave directions as to medicine and disinfectants and departed. Jacob and I took turns in watching poor chips.

On the evening of the next day I was pacing the poop, utterly weary and sick at heart. The red-hot sun went down at last, and the stars came out. The night was brilliantly calm and still. The lights on the esplanade of Rio began to twinkle into the darkness. Far above them on the overhanging terraces, clusters of lights-marking the position of countless villas hung on the blackness of the steep background like diamonds set in jet.

The dim out lines of the huge mountains which rise behind the harbour loomed through the darkness in the faint starlight.

I paced the deck trying to fight against a feeling of utter lassitude and depression. I had a terrible headache, a taste like blood in my mouth, and felt aching and feverish all over.

Presently the black cook Jacob came on to the quarter deck, and touching his cap, said: "Please, Sir, won't you come down and have some tea? It has been ready for half an hour."

Thanks, Jacob—but how is chips?

His black face became grave at once as he replied: "Please, Sir, he died two hours ago; but I did not like to disturb you, so I laid him out straight and still, tied a handkerchief round his poor thin face, and came away softly and shut the door." Make the flag half mast, Jacob.

MARRIAGE AND WIDOW.

ATTEMPTED MURDER BY ARMED BURGLARS.

January 10
A large private house standing in its own grounds at Muswell-hill, in one of the suburbs of London, was the scene of a daring burglary on Tuesday night. The house is called Norton Lees, is situated in a turning off Muswell-hill road, and is occupied by Mr. Harry Wright Atkin. It appears that about 8 o'clock, as Mr. Atkin and his son, Sawyer Atkin, were leaving the house to go to an entertainment in the neighbourhood, the son happened to look up at the front of the house, and was surprised to find that the window of the bedroom above the hall door was open. He called his father's attention to the circumstance, and at that moment two men came to the window, and one of them put out his arm and fired a revolver. Almost before the smoke had passed away a second shot was fired, but neither of them did any injury.

By this time Mr. George D. Atkin, another son, who was at work doing some amateur carpentering at the back of the house, alarmed by the firing, came to the front of the house with a chisel in his hand. The two men had now descended from the window, and they ran up the carriage drive, firing two shots at Mr. Atkin and his sons from their revolvers as they went along, but neither of the shots took effect. Mr. Sawyer Atkin and his father started in pursuit, followed by Mr. George Atkin. At this moment a third man, who was concealed behind some bushes in the garden, seeing that his companions were likely to be captured, fired a shot at Mr. George Atkin, and the bullet struck him in the chest. Notwithstanding this, Mr. Atkin closed with the man, who again, fired at him and shot him in the abdomen, causing him to relax his hold and fall. The other two men, while this was going on, had run out of the garden and into Muswell-hill-road, with Mr. Sawyer Atkin following them. Just as they got into the main road one of them turned round and deliberately presented a revolver at him. The trigger was pulled, because Mr. Atkin states that he heard a clicking sound, but the weapon missed fire. The men then jumped over a fence into a field and were lost to view, but not before Mr. S. Atkin had struck them with a mallet cane which he carried. Inspectors Ferrett and Johnston, with Dr. Forshall, the divisional surgeon of police, were soon on the spot.

Attention was first paid to Mr. George Atkin, who had been carried into the house. His wounds were examined, and the case being deemed a serious one, several other medical men were called in, and subsequently Sir William MacCormac was fetched from his residence in Cavendish-square. After a consultation, it was decided not to probe for the bullets then, the injured gentleman being in too dangerous a condition. A search was made of the place, and it was found that an entry had been effected by climbing up the masonry of the portico or by a ladder placed against the sill of the open window. Only about 15s. worth of things were taken away by the burglars. Mr. Sawyer Atkin states with regard to the affair that while at supper about 8 o'clock he heard an unusual sound in the room over that where he was working but took no notice of it. One of the servants was in the bedroom in question at five minutes to 8 o'clock, but did not notice anything amiss. Mr. Sawyer Atkin was not present while his brother was struggling with the third man and shot, as he was following the two who had run away.

He was much surprised at the burglary, because they had made preparations to give burglars a warm reception. The house had a large alarm bell on the roof, and several members of the family had revolvers and were practised shots, but unfortunately, as it happened, on this occasion they did not carry the weapons about with them. The fact, was that they were taken by surprise at the burglars visiting them at such an hour. The ladder and a rope which were discovered in front of the house were probably the means by which the burglars effected an entry into the house, and these they must have brought with them. Mr. Sawyer Atkin does not think that he can identify either of the men, as it was so dark, and the whole affair did not last more than three minutes.

All he could say was that they were comparatively young men, about 5ft. 6in. in height, so far they resembled three men seen by a neighbour in the vicinity of the house on Friday last. He added that his brother was very seriously injured, but was not in any immediate danger. A number of articles had been packed up by the burglars ready for removal when they were disturbed. Detective-Inspector Miller and other officers are directing the police investigations into the affair, which has caused much excitement in the district, where several burglaries have been committed during the last two or three weeks. Up to Wednesday no arrest had been made.
